VOL. XXVIII.

MARCH, 1933.

No. 1.

WILLIAM BOSE, 1796-1875.

[As the subject of this sketch exerted a very considerable influence on the history of his day and is practically unknown except for the following contemporary newspaper accounts of his death, we have requested Mr. William Bose Marye to give some further notes on Mr. Bose.—EDITOR.]

“Mr. William Bose, formerly of the firm of Dobbin, Murphy, and Bose, publishers of the Baltimore American, and last survivor of the firm, died yesterday at his late residence in this city, No. 114 St. Paul St. in the 79th year of his age. It is believed Mr. Bose was born in Pennsylvania.

“In 1815 at the early age of 19, after leaving college, he became connected with the Baltimore American as one of its editors and proprietors, which relation he held for nearly forty years. He was untiring in his industry, and for a long time managed the paper with ability. About the year 1853 Mr. Bose withdrew from active life with a substantial and well earned competency, and has since lived in retirement. His latter years were spent under the disadvantage of much impaired health. He was the uncle of the late Edmond Bull formerly one of the proprietors of the Balto. Clipper, whose death was announced yesterday. Mr. Bose leaves no children. His funeral will take place from Emanuel Protestant Episcopal Church of which he was a member, on Friday, at 11 a. m.”

—Sun, 23 Dec. 1875, page 4, column 3.

“Died on yesterday, William Bose in the 79th year of his age. At the early age of 19 he had achieved collegiate honors and became at once connected with this paper as one of its proprietors and editors, which relation he held for nearly forty years. By the force of his educated ability, his practical business talent and his untiring industry, he soon acquired an ascendancy in its management which made him the chief among his co-laborers, and, during that period, no public enterprise of interest to the community failed to receive the helpful aid of his acute wisdom and his ready pen.

"It may be truly said that no single individual contributed more than he to give form and presence to the events among which he lived. It was during his controlling management of this paper that John Quincy Adams said that the National Intelligencer and the Baltimore American were the model papers of the country, and might always be profitably contemplated as examples for imitation by their contemporaries.

"After this long service, about the year 1853, Mr. Bose withdrew from active life with the well-earned reward of his industry and talent, and has since lived in retirement, the latter portion of his years being spent in much impaired health. In private life his career was one of unblemished integrity, and in his social relations he was even more exemplary and kind. An early profession of Christian faith led him into communion with the Protestant Episcopal Church, in which he, for a long time held the office of a vestryman, and was always conspicuous in advancing all good works tending to the promotion of religion and virtue."

—Editorial in American, 23 Dec. 1875.

The subject of the foregoing editorials, Mr. William Bose, was born January 20, 1796, probably in Hanover, Pennsylvania, where his father, Jacob Bose, is known to have resided up to a few years before this date. Late in life Jacob Bose removed to Baltimore, where he died October 9, 1797. His widow, Mrs. Catherine Bose, who was the daughter of William and Magdalen Shock, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, continued to reside in Baltimore, where she died January 12, 1839, aged seventy-nine. Mr. Jacob Bose was a man of comfortable means, with a respect for education which he showed in his will by providing that all of his children "be well educated", an admonition which his widow appears to have carried out to the letter in the case of her son William, who was less than two years old when his father died. The Bose and Shock families are believed to have been of pure German extraction. Mr. Penniman has noted in his article on the founders of the Baltimore American, which will appear in this magazine, that Catherine Bose, sister of William Bose, married George Dobbin (1774-1810), founder of the Baltimore family of that name, and has also informed us that Mr. Bose was an uncle of Edmund Bull, editor of the Baltimore Clipper. Mr. Bose married, November 20, 1819, Miss Mary Goulding, daughter of Mr. Patrick Goulding and niece of Mr. Amos Loney, both of Baltimore. Mrs. Bose died February 27, 1859. Mr. Bose married, secondly, January 17, 1861, Miss Elizabeth Emma Gilder, of "Bellevue", Baltimore County, daughter of Captain Reuben Gilder, an officer of the War of 1812 and descendant of the Delaware Gilders. Mrs. Bose died Nov. 22, 1899. A great niece by marriage, and adopted daughter, Miss Elizabeth Mary Bose Gittings, lived with Mr. and Mrs. Bose and was married in 1881 to William Nelson Marye, formerly of Fredericksburg, Virginia. Mr. Bose was one of the founders of Emmanuel Protestant Episcopal Church, where a window in the chancel, formerly the central window, was erected by his widow to his memory. During the latter part of his life Mr. Bose resided at 714 (formerly No. 114) Saint Paul Street, corner of Madison, a residence which he purchased in 1856 from Mrs. Key, widow of Francis Scott Key. Mr. Bose was an accomplished amateur musician.

CHRISTIAN PRELATES OF BALTIMORE ON RUSSO-JEWISH PERSECUTION.

By B. H. HARTOGENSIS, A. B.

Good-will committees to establish better relations between creedists of opposing religions, supposedly a product of the second decade of the twentieth century, were anticipated in Baltimore over forty years ago in a crisis in Jewish history. It was of course to have been expected here where Jews have been living on the best terms with their fellow citizens, since communal life began shortly after the Revolutionary War; enjoying their respect and being mutually helpful. This paper has as its purpose to record some remarkable expressions of protest by Christian prelates, of persecution of Jews in the name of Christianity; they were spontaneous and they antedate by thirteen years the world-wide denunciation of the excesses of the Kischineff massacre for which Baltimore held its meeting of protest¹ on May 17th, 1903 at the Academy of Music under the auspices of the Baltimore Branch Alliance Israelite Universelle. Addresses were made by Dr. Fabian Franklin, Mayor Thomas G. Hayes, John V. L. Findlay, Ex. Gov. William P. Whyte and others.

In chronological order the first referred to is a ringing denunciation by Cardinal Gibbons in a handwritten letter to me dated December 15th, 1890.

"Every friend of humanity must deplore the systematic persecution of the Jews in Russia.

"For my part I cannot well conceive how Christians can entertain other than kind sentiments towards the Hebrew Race, when I consider how much we are indebted to them. We have from them the inspired volume of the Old Testament which we know has been the consolation in all ages to devout souls. Christ our Lord, the founder of our religion, His blessed mother as well as the Apostles were all Jews according to the flesh. These facts attach me strongly to the Jewish race.

"Several months ago I communicated my views on the Jewish race to a leading New York Hebrew paper, the name of which I cannot relate, but you can get the communication by referring to the files of your New York Hebrew Exchanges."

"I am

Yours very sincerely,

J. CARDINAL GIBBONS.

"To B. H. Hartogensis, Esq."

In addition to this autographic letter, the Cardinal gave an interview. Both were published widely in the press dispatches of the entire country. In an interview with the representative of The Jewish Exponent, the Cardinal said, "I am disposed to speak very strongly in this matter as I feel it at heart. As a general rule, the experience of ages has shown that no race or people can be exterminated by persecution and that systematic grinding down called persecution, as practiced by some nations, has often turned on and reacted against those nations themselves. As opposed to this unfair treatment, the United States furnishes the world with the most beautiful example of religious toleration by giving the amplest liberty to all without interfering with any creed. . . . They protect all religions alike without trenching upon the conscience of any individual and it is devoutly to be wished that other nations would follow this splendid example, particularly Russia.

"Christianity as I have said in my letter, is much indebted to the Hebrew race for the highest blessings Christian people enjoy; for the inspired pages of Holy writ, in the Old Testament which have been the consolation of every nation embodying as they do, the highest supernatural wisdom. The founder of our Holy Religion was a Jew, according to the Gospels and so was his mother and the Apostles. Therefore all Christians should feel kindly disposed towards the Hebrew race.

"If any individuals of the Hebrew race commit an offence against society or morality in Russia they should be dealt with according to the laws of the Country, and the code of laws of all civilized government ought to be sufficient to protect their people from any drastic remedies as the exterminating process. The Jews generally have acquired the reputation of being good husbands and devoted fathers, faithful to their domestic duties and so charges against their morality, can scarcely be true. If aught else be laid at their doors, remedies are easy to apply for their alleged sins without recourse to the extreme methods of making life unendurable and crushing the race out of existence. In strong contrast with these crimes now alleged against Russia is an incident in the life of Pope Gregory, surnamed the Great, who lived in the sixth century. It is recorded of him that a certain rich Jew, a leader in his community and chief support of his congregation, became a Christian and in the excess of his zeal after embracing the new creed, took possession of the synagogue, closed it to the Jews and determined to make a church of it. When complaint was made to the Pope by the aggrieved Jews, he ordered the restoration of the place of worship to its former congregation, and saw to it that they were not molested in their devotions.

"I express the ardent hope that all nations through their governments will become more and more tolerant in matters of religion as we are in this Country; and that they will take these United States as their guide here; where all men standing equal in the eyes of God are equal before the law. They must remember that it is not by coercion that men are converted but by an appeal to their consciences."

—Jewish Exponent, December 19th, 1890.

Mr. David W. Glass, a devout Christian and well known church worker, soon thereafter issued a call for a conference of Christians, irrespective of denomination, to express sympathy and afford substantial aid to the oppressed, persecuted and exiled Jews. The meeting was called for Christmas Day in the hall of the Young Mens' Christian Association. The circular read:

"All followers of the Divine Master, who went about doing good cannot but feel sorrow and indignation at the condition of our fellow beings, who have been compelled to leave home and Country on account of their race and who are either exiled or preparing to embark from the land in which they were born, depending on Hebrew brethren in the United States for assistance. Believing that Christians of this Country will readily assist and cooperate with Hebrew associations (though unasked) towards relieving and benefitting the condition of their brethren and thus exemplify the teachings of our Lord. When we Christians consider our obligations to the Hebrew race for our master and our religion, the time seems ripe for some evidence of gratitude. This is a movement in which both Protestant and Catholic Christians can unite. As a result of this Baltimore Conference it is hoped a National Christian Hebrew Aid League may be organized."

—Jewish Exponent, December 26th, 1890.

There was a considerable conflagration raging (Masonic Temple was burning) within a half a block, and this embargo on traffic and the inclement weather kept down the attendance at a very enthusiastic meeting. The surprise is that Christian ministers would come out on Christmas Day for any purpose except their own church or charity or necessity.

—Jewish Exponent, January 2nd, 1891.

A committee was appointed to prepare resolutions and formulate a plan of action as follows: Cardinal Gibbons, Monsignor McColgan, Chancellor Donahue, Revs. Alexander Proudfit of the Second Presbyterian Church, Dr. F. M. Ellis of the Eutaw Place Baptist Church, Bishop Paret, Dr. Julius N. Grammer of St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church, Dr. J. T. Leftwich of the First Presbyterian Church, Rev. A. H. Studebraker of the First English Lutheran Church, Rev. A. M. Courtney of the Madison Square Methodist Episcopal Church, Dr. A. H. Tuttle of the Mt. Vernon Place M. E. Church, W. R. Collins of the Emanuel Reformed Episcopal Church, Rev. R. H. Pullman of the Second Universalist Church, Dr. C. R. Weld of the First Independent Christ Church, Capt. J. Frank Supplee, Rev. Drs. H. W. Schneeberger and Benjamin Szold, Dr. Aaron Friedenwald, Miss Henrietta Szold and B. H. Hartogensis. Speakers were Rev. Dr. Harris, Dr. Proudfit, Father Donohue, Chancellor of the Cathedral (acting for the Cardinal) Rev. E. A. Lawrence, Rev. Schneeberger and Dr. Friedenwald, chairman of the local committee of De Hirsch Fund, president of the local branch of Alliance Israelite Universelle.

Others present were Revs. J. Allison Smith, William Harris, Delew, and Casonovitz and Father Donohue, Percy Guard, G. B. McFarland, H. Johnson, T. D. Owens and Silas M. Morse of Boston, Massachusetts. Nothing ever came of the meeting in the way of substantial action or aid; but the manifestation was genuine, unstimulated and produced good will.

On the following Monday the Protestant Ministers of Baltimore at their regular weekly meeting in the hall of the Young Mens' Christian Association took action. The meeting opened with an address by B. H. Hartogensis, then the associate Editor of the Jewish Exponent, who was requested to attend to discuss the aspect of religious persecution of the Jews in Russia. The Rev. E. A. Lawrence then made a strong address entitled "Christian Virtues Seem Vices in Jews." Published in extenso in Jewish Exponent, January 2nd, 1891.

The Ministers passed the following resolution:

"that we hereby respectfully request our government to ascertain the facts concerning the alleged persecution and if it be found to exist, to use the kindly ministrations of the government for the relief of the Jews in Russia from oppression because of their creed and for other reasons."

The Rebels took the bells out of the Steeples, to cast into cannon, & the Leads which held up the Sashes of the Windows to make ball of. they even took down the Kings Statue for the same purpose, imagining it had been Lead, but were deceiv^d one Scoundrel Duling had the Impudence to kick the Head about the street. Tis almost incredible to think that this Rebellion should be so universelly diffus^d over our Colonies, & that a few wicked designing men could have such art & influence, & carry their Point in opposition to some of the first men on the Continent & that many of sence & affluence, who had nothing to fear and scarcely any thing to wish, & whom no change could hardly better, should be led into so Idle, Vague, & Wanton a scheme this may open their eyes that they may see their error, & avoid so desperate an undertaking for the Future. But I fear the old Hatred for Kings & the seeds of sedition are so thickly sown among them, that it must be thrash'd out of them New England has poyson'd the Whole.

We got their cannon, mortars, tents &c^a As we go forward into the country the Rebels fly before us, & when we come back, they always follow us, 'tis almost impossible to catch them. They will neither fight, nor totally run away. but they Keep at such a distance that we are always above a days march from them. We seem to be playing at Bo peep.

A Proclamation was Issued by Lord Howe & Gen^l Howe, offering every protection to those who would come in & only promise, not to take up Arms themselves nor oblige others to take up Arms against the King, & that their properties should be secur'd for them. sure such terms offer'd when we are in the height of success must induce those deluded Rabble to seize so fair & easy an opportunity of reinstating themselves in the happiness they once Enjoy'd. Remarks &c^a

The Rebels attack'd Trentown with about 7000 men, where Col^o Rahl commanded a Brigade of Hessians, & by some misconduct suffer'd himself to be nearly surrounded, without making any disposition for securing his retreat, he had about 100 kill'd & wounded, & 700 with him & many officers taken prisoners. The Rebels got 6 pieces of cannon & 15 colours. between 4 & 500 of the Hessians who were with Col^o Rahl, made a good retreat to Col^o Donop's Post.

Col^o Ralh died a few days after of his wounds. The Hessian Officers say his death's a lucky circumstance for him, for had he Liv'd he must have been broke with Infamy. at Least.

This Rebellion is most obstinately persisted in, nor do I see that We take proper steps to put an End to it for by our continual blunders, which the Enemy never fail to take advantage of, we seem more to Encourage than dishearten them. I wish our mismanagement may not produce Effects fatal to Great Britain & I greatly fear our neglects are Wilful & that in the End we shall loose this Country.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

And that the said Governor of Maryland by the said Evelins persuasion did come with 40 armed men in the night being ledd by the said Evelin and landed upon the said Iland and tooke possession thereof and take the said John

* Scratched out in the original.

Boteler and Thomas Smith prisoners, and carried them to Maryland, where the said Thomas Smith was condemned. And that by the said Evelins directions when he came for England and by such men as the said Evelin had left att the said Iland the said Governor of Maryland hath since come againe upon the said Iland and plantacion of Kent with 50 armed men and hath so holly reduced the said Iland and the Inhabitants under the Government of Maryland and hath hanged some of the Inhabitants and hath confiscated all the Estate of the said Cloberry and company and hath disposed and carried away both the servants of the said joint stocke and other servants and cattle belonging to the particular estate of the Inhabitants and of the said Claiborne, All which amounteth unto the full valew of 10000, 8000, 7000 or at least 6000^{li}. Ponit tamen de qualibet alia summa etc. Ponit ut supra.

35. Item that the said Evelin soone after the said Claibornes departure to come for England did instigate and perswade the Governor of Maryland to go to the Susquehanoughs where the said Claiborne had planted upon an Iland called Palmers Iland seituate and lieing in the degrees of 41 and 30 minutes of notherly latitude. Whereuppon the said Governor comeing to the ffort and houses there erected did dispannt the same and carried away all the men and neate cattle unto Maryland with all the goodes and household stuffe, whereby the said Claiborne is endamadged and hath lost the valew of 2000 1500 or at least 1000^{li}. Ponit tamen de qualibet alia summa etc. Et ponit ut supra.

36. Item that by the said Evelins will disposall of the goodes and Servants of the said joint stocke and by his ill carriadge and neglects and those affaires and by reduceing the Iland under the Marylanders the said plantacion is damaged to the valew of 10000^{li} or at least 8000^{li} Ponit tamen de qualibet alia summa etc. Et ponit ut supra.

37. Item that the said Claiborne soone after his said arrivall in England delivered to the said Cloberry an Invoice of the goodes and Servants and if all the Estate of the said joint stocke which the said Claiborne left in those parts. And that the said Evelin, had a coppie thereof. And that the said Evelin did mingle the old trucke remaining of former yeares with the trucke that came in the said Shipp the Sara and Elizabeth, saying it could not possiblief be kept a sunder. Et ponit ut supra.

38. Item that the said Claiborne in the yeare 1634 had but 6 servants remaineing alive belonging to the said joint stocke, whose names are mentioned in the said Claibornes foresaid accounts. And that the yeare following, the said Cloberry and company sent (which the said Claiborne received and imployed) 19 servants and noe more. And the said Claiborne having procured the said eleven servants and brought them from Virginia to the end that they or soe many of them as could be spared from the said trade and plantacion should not be any longer charge to the said joint stocke, did join with one Alexander Mountney and John Smyth and their servants to bring freemen and noe way belonging to the said joint stocke and did agree to plant and did plant and cleare ground and build houses att a place in the midst of the said Iland called Craford. By which said planting att Craford the said Iland was better defended and kept against the Indians, who before did committ many outrages. And the said Claibornes owne particular servants, the names of which are expressed in his said accounts did more work and labor for the use and benefitt of the said trade and plantacion then any of the servants of the said joint stocke belonging to the said Cloberry and company att any time did upon the said houses and ground at Craford in leiwe thereof. And that the said Clobery then undertooke to procure a firme patent against the Maryland grant aforesaid. And that thereupon the said Claiborne paid the said Cloberry the said 50^{li} towards the supplie aforesaid to be sent in the Shipp the Sara and Elizabeth, Master Henry Tavernor. Wherefore shortlie after the departure of the said Shipp to Barbary etc. the said Clobery demanded of the said Claiborne to bring in more money for the said voiage to Barbary etc. And that the said Claiborne answered he had noe money unlesse the said Clobery would pay him such mony as he ought him upon account as is aforesaid. BALTIMORE COUNTY LAND RECORDS OF 1772.

Contributed by LOUIS DOW SCISCO.

The second Anglo-Dutch naval war began this year and the news of it reached Maryland in June, but the war seems not to have immediately affected the number of land transactions. The land papers do not indicate any special progress this year in the county's internal development, except that there is a hint that occupation may have been attempted in the tribal territory at the mouth of the Susquehanna. The county's one resident clergyman sells his land and perhaps moved elsewhere.

When the year opened the clerk was using the record book H W No. A B and it sufficed until June. The original liber is now missing, but from pages 114 to 128 of the transcript in Liber I R No. P P are taken the following summaries of the recorded papers.

Deed, March 1, 1671-72, Thomas Pryor, planter, conveying to Mathew Adams, planter, one-half of the 200-acre tract "Henns Roost" at Herring Creek on the east side of Sassafras River, patented October 2, 1667, to Pryor, the grantee's share to be in the rough uncleared part. Witnesses, John Vanheck, Richard Ball. By acknowledgment of March 5 his wife Margaret Pryor declares consent to the transfer.

Deed, December 13, 1670, Henry Stockett, gentleman, of the Ridge, in Anne Arundel County, conveying to Thomas Ford, planter, of Herring Creek in Anne Arundel County, the 300-acre tract "Rupalta" on the west side of Susquehanna River, opposite Palmer's Island, patented September 24, 1663, to Stockett. Witnesses, Anthony Sallaway, Robert Willson. Stockett certifies that on August 20, 1671, he has given seizin to Ford.

Letter of attorney, January 11, 1670-71, Henry Stockett and Katherine Stockett of the Ridge, Anne Arundel County, appointing Mr. Nathaniel Stiles their attorney to acknowledge in court their deed of "Rupalto" to Thomas Foard. Witnesses, Gideon Gundry, Francis Stockett, Hugh Williams.

Deed of gift, April 12, 1666, George Gouldsmith conveying to his brother-in-law Mr. John Collett 100 acres adjoining his northerly line, to be held by Collett for 21 years and then to revert to any of grantor's children "that shall be possessed." Witnesses, Samuel Gouldsmith, Nath. Gouldsmith.

Deed, September 20, 1671, William Chapman, planter, of Gunpowder River, for 1,900 pounds of tobacco, conveying to John Owins the eastern part of the tract "Taylors Mount," on the west side and at the head of Gunpowder River, adjoining to the part now held by John Marly and to land sold to Samuell Tracey and Hugh Williams, Chapman having bought this land from Owins. Witnesses, John Waterton, Henry Kempe.

Letter of attorney, May 25, 1672, William Chapman, planter, of Gunpowder River, appointing John Waterton, gentleman, his attorney to acknowledge in court the sale to John Owins, planter, of a part of "Taylors Mount," now in possession of Thomas Morley. Witnesses, Richard Morgan, Henry Kemp.

Deed, November 7, 1671, Nathaniell Stiles, gentleman, conveying to Thomas Howell, gentleman, the 500-acre tract "Williamston" on the east side of Steelpone Bay, at a creek facing land of George Gouldsmith, as patented February 20, 1664-65, to Stiles. Witnesses, John Vanheek, Augustine Herman.

Deed, November 7, 1671, Nathaniell Stiles, gentleman, conveying to Thomas Howell, gentleman, the 100-acre tract "Cove Tract" on the east side of Steelpone Creek, adjoining land of Mr. Charles James, as patented January 7, 1664-65, to Stiles. Witnesses, John Vanheek, Augustine Herman.

Deed, June 10, 1672, Thomas Howell, gentleman, and wife Elizabeth conveying to Nathaniell Garrett two tracts on north side of Sassafraas River, one being the 500-acre tract "The Worlds End" at Harbore Creek and near Hens Island, and the other being a 150-acre tract formerly taken up by Neales Urinson. PROCEEDINGS OF THE SOCIETY.

November 14th, 1932.—The regular meeting of the Society was held to-night with the President in the Chair.

The Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as read.

Mrs. George E. (Emma Giles) Parker, Regent of the Maryland State Society of the Daughters of the Revolution, was recognized by the Chair. She presented to this Society a copy of the "History of the Organization and Work of the National Society of the Daughters of the Revolution," compiled from the records of that Society by the State Regents. President Harris accepted the gift on behalf of this Society and extended to Mrs. Parker, as regent, the very cordial thanks of the Maryland Historical Society.

A list of the donations to the Society was read.

Dr. J. Hall Pleasants was recognized by the Chair. He presented several very interesting items. First on behalf of Miss Elizabeth Jarvis Winn, a genealogy of the Winn and Jarvis families, compiled by Rev. David Watson Winn and Miss Elizabeth Jarvis Winn; the book is very beautiful from the standpoint of content and format, and especially interesting for the genealogical records which show careful research, and particularly the data on John Wesley Jarvis the painter, as very little has been previously known about his ancestry.

The second item presented on behalf of Mrs. Robert Hale Bancroft of Boston, from the collection of her brother, John J. Milligan of Baltimore, a member of the Society, who recently died, two manuscript volumes, the first being an Inventory of the Estate of her Great-great-grandfather Harry Dorsey Gough (1745-1808), who was the very well-known and wealthy owner of Perry Hall on the Gunpowder River; the second volume contains the data in the lawsuit over Mt. Clare, now known as Carroll Park and had belonged to Charles Carroll, Barrister, who left his property to his nephews, Nicholas and James Mac-cubbin, with the understanding that they change their names to Carroll. Nearly fifty years after the death of the Barrister, the heir of Nicholas sought unsuccessfully to have set aside the codicil of the Barrister's will under which Mt. Clare was left to James (Maccubbin) Carroll.

It was moved, seconded, and unanimously carried that the thanks of the Society be extended to Miss Winn and Mrs. Bancroft for these very interesting and valuable additions to our library.

The following named persons were elected to membership:

Mrs. Joseph J. Funk
Mrs. James Martin Flynn
Miss Ruth Jones
Dr. James G. Marston
Mrs. Elizabeth Bertilin Showacre
D. Charles Winebrenner, Esquire

The President read the following Minute, prepared by the co-workers of the late Mrs. Louis H. Dielman:

"The friends and co-workers of the late Mrs. Louis H. Dielman present the following Minute and ask that it be spread upon the records of the Society.

"We who are Mrs. Dielman's friends and co-workers would like to say a few words about her work for the State of Maryland and this Society.

"Mrs. Dielman's work was not only exquisite in quality, but a real labor of love.

"We shall always remember the earnestness with which she spoke of the necessity for the preservation of the State Archives, and of the rare manuscripts of this Society, which is one of the largest collection owned by any one State Historical Society. She considered it a privilege to do this work and found in it such deep personal joy and satisfaction that it inspired her with the desire to train others in the delicate, painstaking methods she herself had learned at the Library of Congress. Mrs. Dielman's interest in the work of others and her generous recognition and praise were an integral part of the large view she took of the importance of preserving these historical records for future generations. That quality made her an ideal and inspiring teacher. It was her ardent desire that the work should go forward and become a permanent feature of this library's activities.

"Mrs. Dielman had an European sense of quality and finish and the needed patience for its attainment. It is entirely due to her, that this Society now has a small group of trained workers, who desire to maintain her standards and to pass on to those workers who will follow the enthusiasm and patience with which she inspired them. We feel, we can offer her no more fitting and lasting tribute of our affection and admiration.

"The pursuit of the perfect, is the pursuit of sweetness and light."

Vice-President Duvall moved that this beautiful tribute to Mrs. Dielman be spread upon the Minutes of the Society. The motion was seconded and unanimously carried.

The following deaths were reported from among 'our members:

Mr. John S. Reese, on October 4th, 1932.

Mr. John J. Milligan, on October 23rd, 1932.

Mrs. E. Edmunds Foster, on October 30th, 1932.

Mr. Walter G. Odell, Senior, on November 4th, 1932.

Mrs. George Hamilton (Jane James) Cook, on November 14th, 1932.

The President referred briefly to Charles Carroll of Carrollton, recalling to mind the fact that to-day was the 100th birthday of the date of his death, and asked that the Society observe silence for one minute in honor of Charles Carroll of Carrollton.

Dr. Berkley, upon being recognized by the Chair, gave an epitome of the life of Carroll.

Dr. R. T. Haines Halsey was then introduced. He gave an illuminating talk, illustrated with lantern slides, entitled "The Restoration of Homewood" and "Customs in Colonial Times in Maryland."

Upon motion duly seconded and carried the unanimous thanks of the Society were extended to Dr. Halsey.

December 12th, 1932.—The regular meeting of the Society was held to-night with the President in the Chair.

The Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as read.

A list of the donations made to the library and gallery was read.

The following named persons were elected to membership:

Mrs. J. Dorsey Brown

Mrs. Eugene Hopkins

Mrs. Kate Randall Kail

Mr. Henry Powell Hopkins

It was stated that in addition to the list of donors just mentioned the Society is also indebted to Mr. Gilman Paul for his interest in the preservation of the rare and valuable books and pamphlets in the library, as shown by his presentation of a bookcase in which these interesting items can be put, as we cannot allow them to remain on the open shelves. The thanks of the Society were extended to Mr. Paul by Resolution duly passed.

It was stated that John W. Garrett, Ambassador to Italy, had presented a set of Sabin's Bibliography. It was moved, seconded and carried:

"That, the thanks of the Maryland Historical Society be extended to Ambassador Garrett for his gift of Sabin's Bibliography which will be of inestimable value to the Society."

A letter was read from Mr. Ferdinand C. Latrobe presenting to the Society on behalf of Mr. Thomas Winans of London a copy of the Winans Genealogy. The thanks of the Society were extended to Mr. Winans for this gift.

President Harris in speaking of Miss Lucy Harrison made the following remarks:

"It is well known to the members of the Society that its friend, Miss Lucy Harwood Harrison, met, some weeks since, with a serious accident, having fallen and broken her hip.

"Hope had been entertained that there might be complete recovery, but although the surgeons expect she will, later, be able to walk, probably with assistance, Miss Harrison realizes that she will not be able to resume the duties she has so long and so valuably performed as a Member of the Force of the Society. She has accordingly submitted her resignation, to become effective on the thirty-first instant. The Council has been constrained to accept it, though with the most sincere regret that there must thus be terminated a relation which has been both valuable and agreeable to the Society during the whole of its fifty-year continuance."

Miss Harrison's special duties have been in connection with the work of the Committee on Publications and Dr. J. Hall Pleasants of the Committee prepared the following Minute, which was read by George L. Radcliffe, Recording Secretary, who offered it as a Resolution, and same was seconded and unanimously adopted as follows:

"The members of the Maryland Historical Society have heard with sincere regret of the resignation of Miss Lucy Harwood Harrison as a member of the Staff of the Society, and of the accident which has made necessary this action on her part. Miss Harrison became connected with the Society in February, 1883, and during the fifty years of her association with it has won the respect of its members by the ability and fidelity with which she has performed her exacting duties and by the unfailing courtesy which she has shown to all who have come in contact with her in the Library. The accurate manuscript copies of the old parish registers and other colonial records as well as the numberless indexes of various early records used daily by workers in the Library, are almost without exception the work of her hand and mind.

“But even more notable is the part she has played in preparing for publication the Archives of Maryland. Published for the State of Maryland by the Maryland Historical Society, this series, of which a bulky volume has appeared annually for the past half century, is printed with a view to preserving in the original form and making available to students of history the early record of Maryland. Many of these old libers are in a handwriting decipherable only by an expert, or in a state of decay making their accurate copying a matter of great difficulty. Miss Harrison began to transcribe these old records in 1883 and has continued to prepare the greater part of the copy for all the volumes which have since appeared. That this has been done with extraordinary accuracy is the unanimous opinion of all who make use of them. It is gratifying to feel that Miss Harrison rounds off her service to the Society in having had a hand in the preparation of volume fifty which is soon to appear. This is surely a monument to a life’s work of which one may indeed be proud.

“It is the wish of every member of the Society that when Miss Harrison has recovered from her present disability she may be a frequent visitor to the surroundings with which she has been so long identified.”

It was noted that the Constitution of the Society (Article III, sections 8 and 9) provides that Officers, Trustees and members of Standing Committees shall be nominated at the standing meeting of the Society in January, and that further nominations can be made in writing, over the signature of five members entitled to vote, provided same are placed in the hands of the Recording Secretary ten days after the stated meeting.

The following deaths were reported from among our members:

Mrs. Theodore Warner, on December 7th, 1930.

Miss Charlotte E. Nicolai, on November 26th, 1932.

Mr. William L. Marbury was recognized by the Chair. He read a short paper and made some remarks on the Charter of Maryland, 1632, especially concerning the manorial system of Maryland. The thanks of the Society were extended to Mr. Marbury.

Dr. Henry J. Berkley was then recognized by the Chair. He read a paper entitled "Captain Thomas Cornwallis, Founder, Financier, Lawgiver and Soldier of Maryland." The thanks of the Society were extended to Dr. Berkley for his interesting paper.

January 9th, 1933.—The regular meeting of the Society was held to-night with Vice-President Clinton L. Riggs in the Chair.

It was stated that President Harris was suffering from the grippe and could not therefore be present.

The Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as read.

A list of the donations made to the Library was read.

In addition to the regular list of donations the following items were presented:

1. Day Book of an early Annapolis merchant, John Davidson, 1784-1785, showing accounts with Charles Carroll of Carrollton, and Governor Paca; presented on behalf of H. Oliver Thompson and Louis H. Dielman.

2. An Act to regulate and Discipline the Militia of this State passed at the November Session, Chestertown, 1794; presented by Mr. John Gilman D'Arey Paul.

3. A gift from Mr. Louis H. Dielman of the earliest printing of the poem "the Mousetrap." It was stated that we have in Fund Publication No. 36 an appendix containing this poem, edited by Bernard C. Steiner.

4. Mr. Dielman also presented a pamphlet entitled "For God, or For Satan, a Sermon preached at St. Mary le Bow before the Societies for Reformation of Manners, December 27, 1708," by Thomas Bray, who did so much for the parochial libraries of Maryland.

Mr. J. Alexis Shriver presented a scrap book containing newspaper clippings from Prince George and Charles counties, pertaining to the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington. He also presented a collection of programmes used in connection with that celebration.

The thanks of the Society were extended to these donors.

The following named persons were elected to membership:

Mrs. Catherine Bibb Stehman

Mrs. Frederick C. Hicks

Dr. Arthur Bond Cecil

Mr. Newton R. Henderson was then recognized by the Chair. He placed in nomination for office and membership on the Standing Committees the following: (See page 57.)

The attention of the members was called to Article III, Sections 8 and 9, of the Constitution, which provides that additional nominations can be made within ten days, provided that such nominations are made over the signature of five members entitled to vote.

Mr. J. Alexis Shriver then gave a most interesting address on Washington's trips through Maryland, and showed very attractive colored slides in regard thereto.

The thanks of the Society were extended to Mr. Shriver for his most delightful talk.

ANNUAL MEETING

February 13th, 1933.—Immediately upon the adjournment of the regular monthly meeting, the Annual Meeting of the Society was called to order by the President.

The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting were not read, as it was noted that they were printed in the Maryland Historical Magazine for March, 1932.

The President acknowledged the receipt of the Annual Reports of the Trustees and Standing Committees.

It was moved, seconded and carried that the following Annual Reports be accepted without being read.

There being no further business, upon motion duly seconded and carried, the Annual Meeting adjourned.

REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.

As with every report of Board of Directors to Stockholders Meetings, in these parlous times, so that of your Council is regretful in retrospect, enduring in the present and hopeful for the future.

While of the invested capital but one security appears to have suffered serious and permanent loss the Society's income from that source is materially reduced, as it is also by reduction of rental of rooms by the State, by inability of members to meet their accrued dues, and by resignation of members whose impaired incomes constrain them to discontinue participation in the maintenance of the Society and to suffer the consequent deprivation of its enjoyment. In this connection it has been gratifying to note that in no case of discontinuance of membership has there been any intimation of dissatisfaction with the Society, but the letters of retiring members have uniformly expressed sincere regret and usually the hope of return when their financial skies shall have become less overcast.

Rigid economy necessarily results from reduced income and the budget for 1933 has been arranged accordingly, allowances being curtailed or discontinued where possible and operating force reduced. Whether the over-generous hospitality which the Society has long extended to non-members must be restricted is under consideration, since it tends to increase the burden of those whose annual dues so largely maintain the opportunity for such hospitality.

The Annual Reports of the Trustees of the Athenaeum and of the several Standing Committees have been submitted and examined and will be published for the detailed information of members, in the forthcoming number of the Magazine.

The Trustees of the Athenaeum include in their report the installation of an elaborate electric burglar alarm system and that it is operating satisfactorily. Notwithstanding the heavy cost of this system it is felt to be fully justified by the protection afforded the property.

The Committee on the Gallery reports the loan to the United States George Washington Bi-Centennial Commission, for exhibition at the Corcoran Gallery, of seven valuable portraits, which have been returned uninjured.

Loan of appropriate articles was also made to local exhibits in connection with the Bi-Centennial and with the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Charles Carroll of Carrollton.

The gift of Miss Maria Lovell Eaton and Mrs. Charles R. Weld of a valuable collection of portraits, silver and other articles, and the establishment of "The Eaton Family Room" is also reported with grateful appreciation.

The Committee on Publications has prepared and issued Volumes 48 and 49 of the Archives of Maryland, the former being the "Journals and Correspondence of the State Council, 1781-1784," and the latter the "Proceedings of the Provincial Court, 1662-1666." The Society's Magazine has been regularly issued, though temporarily somewhat reduced in volume, from motives of economy.

The Committee on Membership reports a net decrease of one hundred and five members in all classes during the year (including February 9th, 1933).

The Committee on Genealogy and Heraldry reports many and valuable contributions to its already large genealogical library.

The report of the Committee on Addresses and Literary Entertainment enumerates the interesting and valuable papers which, through its assiduous and efficient management, have been presented at each of the nine regular meetings of the Society during the year.

The Society has heretofore made permanent record of its sincere and abiding sorrow for the death on August 6th, 1932, of DeCourcy Wright Thom, for forty-eight years and Active Member, for sixteen years an honored Vice-President and always a valued counsellor and a cherished friend.

It was with regret the resignation of Miss Lucy Harwood Harrison was accepted, an accident having constrained her to retire from a valuable and highly appreciated continuous service of over fifty years, each of which but led to the warmer regard which grew up between her and those of us who were privileged to know her.

And so we close a somewhat imperfect day and look forward hopefully to another and more nearly perfect one, where we—the financially innocent—shall not continue to suffer for the sins of the financially guilty—whoever they may be—if any.

Respectfully submitted, for the Council,

W. HALL HARRIS, President.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE GALLERY

The Committee on the Gallery reports that the principal activities during 1932 were connected with the George Washington Bi-Centennial.

The Society loaned to the United States George Washington Bi-Centennial Commission the following portraits to be exhibited in the Corcoran Art Gallery from March 5th to November 24th: Samuel Chase, Mrs. Samuel Chase, Thomas Johnson and family, George Washington at Dorchester Heights, Washington by Gilbert Stuart, General Nathaniel Green, and the Surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

Loans were also made to Hutzler Brothers and Hochschild Kohn and Company for their George Washington Bi-Centennial exhibitions. Various articles connected with Charles Carroll of Carrollton were loaned to Hutzler Brothers for a window display they arranged to commemorate the 100th anniversary of his death.

Under the portrait of Mr. H. Irvine Keyser, which hangs in the Gallery, has been placed a bronze plate on which is noted his connection with the Society and the fact that the buildings and grounds were given by his wife as a memorial to him.

The interesting and valuable collection of portraits, silver and various family relics which Miss Maria Lovell Eaton and her sister, Mrs. Charles R. Weld, had presented to the Society, were arranged together in a room to be known as the "Eaton Family Room."

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY

The Library Committee reports that although it has been seriously handicapped by lack of funds for the purchase of books and manuscripts, the Library's collection has been materially increased through generous gifts of members and friends. During the past year we have received 247 books, 132 pamphlets, 21 maps, 19 prints, 30 pieces of music, 196 manuscripts and 15 photo-stat copies. This enumeration cannot convey any adequate idea of the interest and value of the gifts, and a more detailed account would merely prove tedious.

One of the most useful and valuable items is the set of Sabin's catalogue of Americana, presented by Hon. John W. Garrett, a set of such intrinsic value as to be entirely beyond our power to purchase. Another outstanding item is the set of the "Confederate Veteran," presented in memory of Mrs. Thomas B. Gresham. If space permitted, it would be a pleasure to acknowledge each individual gift.

The maps mentioned above are mainly manuscript maps or copies from manuscripts of local surveyors. They have been secured through the co-operation of the Map Division of the Library of Congress and of the Maryland State Roads Commission, the latter organization having found these early records to be of substantial value in the prosecution of their work. One such map, which is in bad physical condition is being entirely traced by the Commission and copies of the tracing will soon be made available. All of the above copies have been made without cost to the Society.

Cataloguing has been steadily carried forward capably and intelligently by the Misses Davison, who have brought to light and made available many rare and valuable books, long forgotten and out of service. Our ability to serve the needs of special student investigators is largely dependent on this branch of the work.

In the repair department, 3,085 pieces have been repaired, crepelled and mounted for binding, and it is gratifying to know that this work is carried on at a remarkably low cost, while not inferior in quality to any similar work being done elsewhere.

Among our many visitors and readers are many out of town investigators to whom every facility is extended and from whom we constantly hear expressions of gratitude for courteous and efficient service on the part of the employees.

Respectfully submitted,

LOUIS H. DIELMAN,
Chairman, Library Committee.

REPORT OF FINANCE COMMITTEE

On Wednesday, February 1st, in company with the Treasurer all the securities were checked and from the bonds were cut coupons to mature between this date and January 1st, 1934, inclusive.

The Society is to be congratulated upon the character of its investments and of their diversification.

Nothing occurred in the year just closed which required the formal attention of the Finance Committee.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM INGLE,
Chairman.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLICATIONS

The Committee published and distributed during the year 1932, two volumes of the Archives of Maryland. Volume 48 bears the title-page date of 1931, although it did not actually appear until early in 1932. Volume 48 is the "Journals and Correspondence of the State Council 1781-1784"; Volume 49 is the "Proceedings of the Provincial Court 1663-1666."

The Maryland Historical Magazine has continued to appear under the careful supervision of its editor, Louis H. Dielman. The September and December issues, numbers 3 and 4 of Volume 27, had to be cut in size owing to the necessity of economy. The allowance to the Committee for the publication of the Magazine shows an apparent balance, but unfortunately this is due to certain reservations made by the Treasurer who found it necessary to hold back some bills for payment until January 1933, that for the September issue amounting to $343.75, being among those held over. The total cost of publishing the Magazine for the year was $45.36 less than the $2000.00 appropriated. Following is a statement of the Magazine allowance.

Deborah, daughter of Col. Joseph Chapline, Sr., of Frederick County, Maryland, born Sept. 9, 1746, married John, son of Rev. Samuel Thomson.

Ruhamah, daughter of Col. Joseph Chapline, Sr., born 1752, married Capt. Alexander Thomson, son of Rev. Samuel Thomson.

John Thomson and Deborah his wife by a deed dated Hagerstown, June 8, 1791, conveyed property located in Sharpsburg.

HISTORICAL MAGAZINE

No. 2.

A MARYLAND GOVERNOR WHO NEVER GOVERNED.

By B. HOWELL GRISWOLD, JR.*

Alike above the sun-lit shelves of this library, and below in its dusty vaults, there lies hidden away, many a romantic tale imprisoned in a single sentence of some ancient document, or some dry-as-dust history.

I wonder, sometimes, when the lights are out, if the little people of these romantic tales do not crawl out of their prison sentences, to relate to each other their experiences on earth, and to explain as they do in the old soldiers' homes, why their names and the incidents of their lives are not writ larger on the pages of history.

If they do not, then their only chance of rescue from oblivion lies in the microscopic or romantic eye of some dilettante, who sometimes sees an illuminated manuscript where the historian sees only black ink.

From the standpoint of historical value, such incidents are perhaps rightly regarded by the historian as of little significance, or worthy of only the passing notice of one whose wealth of material too often overwhelms his power of choice.

If however, historians must confine themselves to a "kingdom for a stage, princes to act, and monarchs to behold"; if histories make men wise," and that is the sole motive of history, there is an end to such nonsense as romance.

And yet, if true tales of the past delight the mind, and fancy as well as reason plays its part in a well-balanced personality,

* Read before the Society.

then we must remember that much is lost to us in too sedate a history, for in the past we have had too many dull Kings, colorless Princes and uninteresting monarchs.

* * * * *

Let those of us who are young enough, or old enough, to be romantic, gather in Boccacio's garden occasionally, and make merry with tales of the past—tales of a more modest aspect, perhaps tales that bear a more genuine seal of truth.

If you will pull your chairs a little closer, one such tale I shall tell you tonight, and perhaps the best way is to tell it all or most of it at once. This is the story:

* * * * *

There was once appointed by a King of England to be Governor of Maryland a man who was reputed to be the illegitimate son of Shakespeare. He was a poet who succeeded Ben Jonson as Poet Laureate of England. He was a soldier knighted for bravery on the field of battle. He was a friend of Kings and Princes and an intimate of an unhappy Queen of England. He was a courtier "possessed of a pleasing address, a handsome person, of buoyant spirits and ready wit." He was a playwright (the most popular of his day) who first introduced the word "opera" to the English language, and scenery and women to the English stage. And last, but not least, he was a prisoner whose life was saved by the poet Milton, and a poet who in turn saved the life of the prisoner Milton.

All that remains of this colorful personality now lies buried in the Poet's corner, Westminster Abbey. Over his tomb is the inscription (borrowed from that of his neighbor in death, and his predecessor in life):

"O rare Sir William Davenant!"

In general reading, having crossed the trail of the story of Davenant's connection with Maryland, I applied—as is customary with all intelligent people who have such inquiries in mind, to my friend, Dr. J. Hall Pleasants, who produced from the old Calvert papers, a pamphlet "Printed in the Yeare 1653 " entitled: " The Lord Baltimore's Case Concerning the Province of Maryland " giving " certaine Reasons of State " why Parliament should not impeach his rights. In this document, " Lord Baltimore " presents evidence of his adherence, not to the crown but to the Commonwealth.

Incidentally his brief further refers to the area of our now sovereign State as " so remote and wild a place as Mariland " (sic) and impolitely to its then inhabitants as " such necessitous, factious people as usually new Plantations consist of for the most parte."

How different this is from the courteous and inviting language of Lord Baltimore's first prospectus and bid for adventurers issued some nineteen years before, in which he sets forth " how Englishmen may become Angels, the King's Dominions be extended, and the adventurers attain Land and Gear; together with other advantages of that " Sweet Land."

But today, even bankers have learned the difference between a prospectus and a retrospectus.

All of this is in passing. The portion of the document that interests us tonight is annexed as a fitting climax to Lord Baltimore's brief; it is entitled: " A true Copy of a Commission from the Late King's eldest Sonne, to Mr. William Davenant " to dispossess Lord Baltimore of " the said Province because of his adherence to the Commonwealth."

One notes from the document the scrupulous care with which Lord Baltimore's lawyers follow the custom of the times, and refer to the heir to the throne as " the late King's eldest Sonne " and to our " Governor " as " Mr." Wm. Davenant—not Sir William Davenant.

The copy of the Commission so submitted with the brief is asserted to be " a true Copy * * * the original whereof remains with the Council of State."

Terms of Commission.

The Commission to Davenant sets forth that " whereas Lord Baltimore * * * doth visibly adhere to the Rebels of England, and admits all kinde of schismatics and sectaries and other ill-affected persons to the said Plantations (of Maryland)" etc., etc., "know ye therefore that we, reposing speciall trust and confidence in the courage, loyalty and affection to Us of you Sir Wm. Davenant, do appoint you our Lieutenant Governor of the said Province or Plantations of Maryland, with all the Forts, Castles, Plantations, Ports and other Strengths thereunto belonging."

Then follows an interesting paragraph. This paragraph, as originally drafted, specifically denies any intent "to prejudice the rights of the Proprietary in the Soyle." But there is an insertion (on the side of the document) referred to by asterisk, which states emphatically: "This clause includes Soyle and all." Such a phrase sounds more royal-like than lawyer-like. The directness of the statement and the absence of the customary legal phraseology justifies the assumption that the insertion was actually made by or at the insistence of the indignant "late King's eldest Sonne."

The lawyers drafting the document evidently had in mind merely a military appointment. Not so Charles II. He meant the Commisison to Sir William Davenant to include "Soyle and all."

But before we enlarge upon the significance of this Commission, or mention Davenant's effort to assume the position of "Governor" of Maryland, it may be well to give a brief sketch of Sir William Davenant himself, and to recall the historic "stage setting" before which his little drama was played:

Who was Sir William Davenant?

"Sir William Davenant?—Who was he?" I hear rumblings in the darkness of your mind, tinged with the evening lamp of the dingy boarding school, or the cracked and dirty window of the university lecture room. "Who the Dickens was Sir William Davenant?" I hear you say—"I remember him vaguely."

Of course you do—"Lives of the Poets Laureate"—"Poets of the Restoration," etc., etc.

But what did he write? Quantities, my friends—vast quantities. Don't be discouraged, however. No one but Dr. Welch, or a professor of English at Johns Hopkins University could give you today Davenant's date right off the bat, for the later critics and Greenwich Village poets have pushed all reference to him out of nearly all modern literature save the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

And yet he was quite a man. He was the son of a beautiful and well educated mother, and his father was—or ought to have been — John Davenant — a wealthy vintner of Oxford, who owned the Crown Inn—which, if my memory does not fail me, is still a point of delightful hospitality and old memories in Oxford town today.

The "father" was a man not merely of wealth, but apparently of some ability, for he became Mayor of Oxford. It is known that William Shakespeare, on his way from Stratford-on-Avon to London, frequently visited with the Davenants. He was evidently a close friend, for when young William Davenant was baptized at the Crown Inn on March 3rd, 1606, Shakespeare became his godfather.

There is a story connected with this, for young Davenant, with the levity unbecoming the son of a good mother, frequently told in later years to his boon companions, the following anecdote:

"Where are you running so fast?" said an Oxford dignitary one day to little Davenant, whom he met in the street, scampering along in breathless haste. "I am going to see Godfather Shakespeare," replied the boy. "Fie, fie!" rejoined the divine, "Why are you so superfluous? Have you not learned the third commandment?"

And Davenant would further observe that "it seemed to him that he writ with the very pen that Shakespeare wrote, and was contented enough to be thought his son."

However, the statement that he was the illegitimate son of Shakespeare is generally decried today. The Mid-Victorians did not like the idea, and in "The Lives of the Poets Laureate" the author brings forward as justifiable argument the fine character of the mother of Davenant, but adds, by way of further argument (delightfully Mid-Victorian), that the idea "jars with our well-grounded belief in the irreproachable character of our great national dramatist."

Young Davenant's first attempt at composition was an "Ode in Remembrance of Master William Shakespeare."

He was only fairly well educated. He attended the grammar school of his native parish, and in 1621 matriculated at Lincoln College. He did not however, obtain a degree. Wood who referred to him as "the sweet swan of Isis" said he obtained some knowledge of logic, and though he lacked in university learning, yet "he made as high and noble flights in the poetical faculty as fancy could advance without it."

On leaving the university, he became page to the famous Frances, Duchess of Richmond, a romantically mad creature, who aspired to an alliance with the King, then a widower. Having elevated herself by her own aspirations, she thereafter refused to eat at the table of a subject.

Later Davenant resided in the household of Sir Fulke-Greville, Lord Brooke, the poet and philosopher, and friend of Sir Philip Sidney. Lord Brooke, while Davenant was a member of his household, was stabbed to death by one of his servants. You will find that all through his life, this fellow Davenant was pursued by the spectacular—madness and murder, wars and prisons, captures and escapes.

After the death of Lord Brooke, Davenant was left without money or position, and set himself seriously to literary work. He became popular—the literary and fashionable man of his day, and was constantly about the Court. He wrote many poems of a miscellaneous character, but his real predilection was for the theatre.

After the death of Ben Jonson in 1637, Davenant's plays and poems constituted the background of his claim to the Poet Laureateship. The Queen interested herself in his appointment and he was made Poet Laureate of England. He continued to divert the Court and his friends with plays.

But the age was not destined to continue as one of poetry and plays. The struggle between the King and Commons was approaching a crisis, and Davenant, the courtier, naturally allied himself with the King's interest. He was evidently, even at this time, something more than a versifier and a man about the Courts, for he was accused in 1641 of sharing in a plot to induce the Army to desert Parliament. He sought safety in flight, and an order was issued for his arrest. He was brought back to London and released on bail. A second time he attempted to escape, and was captured again.

Eventually he managed to evade his gaolers, and joined his friends, Queen Henrietta Maria, the young Prince and their adherents in France, where he remained for several years.

As the King's affairs became more and more serious and menacing, Davenant dropped his pen, picked up the sword, returned to England and offered his services as a soldier. He proved himself to be a brave one, for in September 1643 he received the honor of knighthood for services at the siege of Gloucester.

But neither war, nor rumors of war, nor imprisonment, nor escapes, nor adventures with royalty could stop the flow of his facile pen. Everywhere and at all times he was writing—in the army—in prison—in exile—he poured out his wit, if not his soul, in plays or in verse. He was, too, a restless spirit and needed change, for after a somewhat brief war experience, he again returned to France. There we find him suddenly placing upon himself the badge of the Church of Rome, though he was not credited with any very serious convictions.

Shortly after his "conversion" his new-found religion must have been subjected to a pretty stiff test, for the Queen determined to send her advice to the King to purchase his safety by sacrificing the Church, and Davenant was selected for this delicate mission.

Charles I however, was not a man subject to such whimsies. It is recorded on this occasion that the "King was transported with so much passion and indignation that he gave him (Davenant) more reproachful terms and sharper reprehension than he did ever towards any other man, and forbade him to presume to come again into his presence," whereupon Davenant returned to France "exceedingly dejected and afflicted."

Upon his return to France, despite his duties to the family Court, Davenant's pen still continued to flow; but this outlet to his emotions could satisfy for a brief period only. Life in France became too inactive, and his earlier biographers say that in 1650 "he projected a plan for leading a body of workmen to Virginia, a scheme greatly encouraged by the Queen."

This is interesting, for it is at this point apparently, that we in Maryland became interested in him.

It is evident that his earlier biographers missed the significance of his voyage. Our present information indicates that if the copy of the Commission to Davenant now in possession of the Maryland Historical Society is correct, the adventure was something more important than that of an adventurer leading a body of workmen to Virginia. It becomes evident that he was on his way to Maryland (probably by way of Virginia) to carry out the warrant of his Prince and patron, and to assert his position as "Lieutenant-Governor" of Maryland.

* * * * *

Reasons for Davenant's Appointment.

And now having brought our "Governor" to this particular point, let us leave him on the high seas, while we examine into the causes that led to his appointment by Charles II, so far as we are able to interpret them with the information now before us.

The best approach, of course, is to sum up the conditions in England and Maryland at this time:

Davenant's commission reads: "Given at our Court in Jersey the $\frac{16}{6}$ day of February, $\frac{1650}{49}$, in the second Yeare of our Reigne."

For the purpose of comparison with other historic dates, we shall use February 16, 1650 as the date of the Commission of Charles II to Davenant.

Charles I had been beheaded January 1649. Cromwell had later marched from victory to victory in Ireland, and the future Charles II had retired to the Island of Jersey "which alone remained faithful to him of all his southern dominions." He was in negotiation with Scotland, urging the Scotch to a renewed effort to put a Scotch Stuart back on the throne of England, and to overthrow the Puritans who were then in command of the Commonwealth.

But the attention of the "eldest Sonne of the late King, Charles I" as the Puritans referred to him, or "King Charles II" as he was known to the royalists, was not centered alone upon the crown of England. This young King, 20 years of age, was attempting to meet at every possible point the efforts of the Puritans to destroy his power. His attention had been called to Virginia and Maryland, and to the conditions in the latter colony, and moved by what he had heard, he apparently determined to attempt to assist Governor Berkeley of Virginia who had recognized him as King, and to avenge himself for what he considered the disloyalty of Lord Baltimore.

It was worth his while to protect his loyal followers in Virginia and to control these two colonies, and for lack of a better tool perhaps, he determined to appoint and did appoint as "Lieutenant Governor" of Maryland, Sir William Davenant, his friend—an adventurous spirit and a soldier of fortune. Furthermore, he intended to make it worth while, for it was not to be merely Ports and Forts that his "Governor" was to command, but Davenant was to be entitled to "Soyle and all."

About this time Charles II completed his negotiations with the Scotch, landed on the shores of Scotland, was shortly thereafter defeated at Dunbar, and a year later overwhelmingly defeated at Worcester—September 3, 1651.

* * * * *

Lord Baltimore's Position.

Now let us turn to conditions in Colonial Maryland. At this time, the leader of any colony that did not belong, by virtue of the type of its people, to one party or another, must have been much put to it to determine which way to jump.

The Puritans of New England, of course, continuously sided with the Puritans in the mother country. Governor Berkeley of Virginia on the other hand, as has been indicated, was a royalist-Governor in fact and at heart, and attempted to support the Crown through all of its troubles.

Lord Baltimore, of course, was beset with difficulties. He had been a close friend of Charles I, had obtained his charter and his rights from him, had attempted to establish a religious sanctuary in Maryland, primarily for Roman Catholics, and held what was in those days a very advanced view—namely, the wisdom of separation of State and Church.

As we all know, the separation idea proved to be a satisfactory viewpoint only to the under-dog. When one controlled the government, it became one's religious duty to aid and support one's creed by the good old-fashioned method of excluding by law all other religions than one's own. When one was out of power it became obvious that it was cruel and brutal to attempt to influence or control by law one's liberty of conscience.

It is possible that the Lords Baltimore consistently adhered to this doctrine of separation of State and Church; but during the rapidly changing scenes in England, they must have appeared to the observant philosopher as somewhat "shifty" fellows who "ran with the hounds." All England knew that George Calvert, in his early days, when endeavoring to obtain his charter, had been befriended by Charles I, and in a letter to the King—August 19, 1629, he had stated that his object was "to enlarge your Majesty's empire in this part of the world."

His son, Cecilius, too, had proclaimed his loyalty, but later in the presentation of his "Case Concerning the Province of Maryland," Cecilius asserted his loyalty, not to the King, but to the Commonwealth, and added:

"It is notoriously known that, by his (Lord Baltimore's) expresse direction, his officers and the people there did adhere to the interest of the Commonwealth, when all other English Plantations (except New England) declared against the Parliament." He adds, as an argument persuasive to a Puritan Parliament, that he "had received their friends in time of their distresse."

So much for adherence to the Commonwealth. Perhaps we should also recall that some 65 years later, the then Lord Baltimore turned Protestant, and as a result the Proprietary government was restored to him.

But all this must seem blasphemous to Marylanders, and truth to tell, this view of the Lords Baltimore as "shifty" politicians does not do them justice. It overlooks, as has been indicated, what was perhaps their main purpose, namely, that Maryland was to be a "land of sanctuary" for men of all creeds. It is true that the idea of a "sanctuary" was not so broad in its scope as it would be today, for in the so-called famous "Act of Toleration" passed in 1649 (concerning which we boast not a little) the Act included in the list of those to be tolerated only such as "did not blaspheme God, or deny their Saviour, Jesus Christ, or deny the Holy Trinity, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, or the Godhead of the said three Persons of the Trinity, or the Unity of the Godhead."

Those who did so deny were offenders under the Act, and offenders who should be rebuked by death and confiscation of property.

Those who spoke reproachfully of the Virgin Mary, or the Apostles were to forfeit five pounds (showng an interesting weighing of values); a second offense was punishable by forfeiture of ten pounds (or by public whipping and imprisonment); and a third offense by forfeiture of goods and banishment. Anyone who called the follower of another creed a reproachful name, such as Heretic, Idolator, Puritan, Papist, Jesuit, etc., was to be fined ten shillings.

Nor could the citizens of the free state profane the Sabbath day "by frequent swearing, drunkenness * * * disorderly recreation, or work that was not absolutely necessary."

Outside of these restrictions, one could do pretty much what one wanted in such matters in Maryland, for the Act says that "enforcing of the Conscience in matters of religion hath frequently fallen out to be of dangerous consequences," and provides that no one "professing to believe in Jesus Christ shall be molested in his religion with the exceptions above noted."

Disloyal Acts of Lord Baltimore.

But we are departing from our text. What were the "acts of disloyalty" on the part of Lord Baltimore of which Charles II complained? They are cited in the Commission which he issued to Davenant. They referred to Lord Baltimore's "visible adherence to the Rebels of England," his "admission of all kinde of schismatics and sectaries * * * into the Plantations of Maryland," and finally, "the very great prejudice to our service thereby, and very great danger to Our Plantations in Virginia, who have carried themselves with so much loyalty and fidelity to the King, Our Father of blessed memory, and to Us * * *."

What was the basis of the charge that he had "admitted all kinde of schismatics and sectaries in Maryland"?

In 1642, you will recall the royalists had withdrawn from Parliament; Charles I had raised his standard at Nottingham, and later was defeated at the siege of Gloucester, where our friend, Sir William Davenant had been knighted for bravery.

The year 1643 had been a year crowded with events significant in the history of England and potent in their influence upon Maryland history.

It was in this year that Parliament had passed an ordinance for the sequestration of properties of the King's adherents, doubtless causing no little uneasiness in the minds of men like Lord Baltimore. At all events, we find that Leonard Calvert himself in this year, had returned to England and had appointed Giles Brent to act for him during his absence.

In this same significant year (1643) the Virginia assembly had passed an Act requiring all ministers to conform to the orders and constitution of the Church of England. As a result, Lord Baltimore had extended an invitation to the Puritans of Virginia to change their residence and move to Maryland.

The story of the Puritan colonies in Virginia is one of very great interest and one likely to divert any writer. I remember many years ago coming across a memoranda in an ancient Massachusetts document to the effect that the Puritans of Massachusetts had sent three ministers of the Gospel to Virginia to convert the "ungodly" Virginians; and I thought I remembered a note to the effect that these ministers of the Gospel were never afterwards heard of.

Whether these missionaries met a violent death, or made their descensus averno more slowly and with the aid of the ungodly julep, did not appear. The latter seems less cruel in what at that time was a very cruel world. I was interested therefore to find the other evening a practical confirmation of this ancient memoranda—(but not of my conclusion) in a book of Father Russell's—"Sanctuary in Maryland." Only Father Russell's story is much more prosaic. Truth is as rude as most wives in spoiling a good story.

But to return: It is true that but little response had been made to Lord Baltimore's first invitation to the Puritans, but it was a significant forerunner of what was to come, for in 1648, you will remember that Virginia expelled from her colony William Durant and Richard Bennett, leading Puritans, and they took refuge in Maryland. At their solicitation, Governor Stone again invited the whole colony of Virginia Puritans to settle in Maryland. Some few accepted at once, but it was in the following year, 1649, that about 300 of them established a settlement which they named "Providence" at the mouth of the Severn across "Spa Creek" from Annapolis, at a point now known as "Eastport."

We now see what Charles II meant when he charged Lord Baltimore with having "admitted into the Plantations of Maryland all kinde of schismatics and sectaries."

* * * * *

On what grounds was Lord Baltimore also charged with "adherence to the Rebels of England"?

It appears that in 1649, when news of the death of Charles I had reached Maryland, Governor Stone was absent and Thomas Greene, his appointee and vice-Governor, following the example of Governor Berkeley of Virginia, had proclaimed Charles II the lawful sovereign; Governor Stone, on his return, set aside this action and Lord Baltimore had supported Governor Stone.

* * * * *

And so it was from the Isle of Jersey that Charles II issued his warrant to Sir William Davenant, and issued it about the time he was concluding negotiations with Scotland, and before his landing and defeat at Dunbar and Worcester.

But alas! for the best laid plans of mice and men and kings. Davenant whom we left somewhere back on the high seas was not destined to see Maryland. His ship was seized in the Channel by a Parliamentary man-of-war, which took the new "Governor" back to the Isle of Wight, whence he was removed to Cowes Castle, 1651/52, and thence to the Tower to await trial for high treason. Whether or not Davenant, languishing in prison, saw fair visions of the plantations of Maryland, history does not record.

At all events the early Marylanders apparently knew as little about its new "Governor" as the average Marylander knows today, and possibly proof of what we now know would have been lost to us had it not been that Lord Baltimore endeavored to prove his case of loyalty to the Commonwealth by indicating that Charles II thought him disloyal to the Crown.

* * * * *

This is undoubtedly the proper place to end a good "tale"—but my membership in the Maryland Historical Society is asserting itself, and I must justify my membership with a well rounded narration.

Significance of the Event.

A little study of the conditions in the plantations of Maryland at that time indicates that the action of Charles II was not an "idle compliment" to one of his supporters.

Davenant's seeming lack of sufficient power to assert his authority must not be taken too seriously. At all events he had a ship and was on his way to secure the co-operation of the Virginians. This ship, aided by an armed force from Virginia may well have seized the Government. Captain Ingle but five years before, with a Commission from the Parliament had captured St. Marys and established a fort nearby. A year later Calvert, with a small force had driven him out.

* * * * *

Now let us again pick up the thread of the story of Davenant's life. He was captured on the high seas by Parliamentary ships on his way to the Provinces, May 17, 1650. On July 2nd he was brought before the Council for trial on the charge that he and other leading loyalists had been concerned in a scheme to bring a French Army to England in 1641. Evidently the Council at the time did not know of the King's Commission to Davenant—that they had before them the King's "Governor of Maryland."

His case coming up before the Committee of Parliament, they gave him, as a witty someone said "the noes of the House because he had no nose of his own"—a reference to the fact that Davenant at this time had a nose like a "Japanese pug" due to a wound or to disease. Still he was kept in prison.

In November 1652, however, the Commission to him as Maryland "Governor" was brought before the Council of State and Davenant had a narrow escape. The Council, after consideration, influenced doubtless by the fact that Davenant had already spent much time in prison, did not proceed further with the matter, but returned him to prison.²

It is stated by one biographer that "while he was awaiting trial for high treason in the Tower, and when the storm was about to break over him, his difficulties suddenly disappeared."

At all events, it is recorded that in 1654, he made an appeal to the Protector to consider his case as a whole, and he was released June 22nd, 1655. Gosse says it is believed that the personal intercession of Milton led to this result. Another account is that he was released by the desire of two aldermen of York, once Davenant's prisoners, whom he had allowed to escape.

However, he was released, and shortly thereafter published "Gondibert," the work on which his fame mainly rests, and which Gosse pronounces as a "cumbrous, dull production, but relieved with a multitude of fine and felicitous passages and lends itself most happily to quotation."

Pope says of "Gondibert": "not a good poem, though there are many good things in it."

Davenant's friends suggested that he again resume his theatrical career—anathema to the Puritans; yet somehow he persuaded the Government to permit him to open a sort of theatre at Rutland House in Charter House Yard, where he introduced a series of "representations" which he called "operas" as an inoffensive term. This word was thus first introduced into the English language as applicable to the stage.

But we are not yet through with his spectacular career, for in 1659, he again found himself in prison for complicity in Sir George Booth's revolt.

His fortune quickly shifted in the following year when Charles II was restored. We now find Davenant in high favor and influential in saving the life of Milton, who nine years before was reputed to have saved his (Davenant's) life.

He flourished under royal favor for eight years at his new theatre at Lincoln's Inn Field, which he called the "Duke." In the year this theatre was opened, a royal patent was obtained which permitted women's parts to be taken by women "in order to purge the stage and provide harmless amusement." Davenant, is thus credited with the first important appearance of a woman—Mrs. Coleman—on the stage.

Later critics did not like this departure from the simplicity of beardless youths representing women. Much less did they approve his final destruction of the simplicity of the Shakespearean stage by the introduction of elaborate stage scenery and mechanism. He has been condemned therefore in no measured terms as having had a wholly disturbing influence on English drama.

Yet so far as his own personal fortunes were concerned, the wisdom of his introduction of women to the stage was subsequently proven by the fact that Davenant was said to have made nearly $1000 a week from his plays. He proceeded to build a new theatre which was finished in November 1671, after his death.

He became the most popular dramatist of his day. It is said of him that men—the most competent from capacity to judge, “pronounced in favor of his plays, and the applause of the vulgar followed the decision of the learned.”

I counted in Pepys diary, at least a half dozen favorable comments concerning Davenant’s “operas,” such as:

“July 2nd, 1661. Went to Sir William Davenant’s opera, this being the 4th day that it hath begun, and the first that I have seen * * * the King being come, the scene opened; which indeed is very fine and magnificent and well acted, all but the Eunuche, who was so much out that he was hissed off the stage.”

There were the customary flattering remarks of poets and wits of his day, influenced no doubt by his position at court and his office as Poet Laureate.

His verses received the following tribute from Sir John Suckling:

“Thou hast redeemed us Will, and future times
Shall not account unto the age’s crimes
Dearth of pure wit; since the great lord of it,
Donne, parted hence, no man has ever writ
So near him, in’s own way.”

As to his character—as might well be suspected of an adventurous soldier, it was generally agreed that he lacked something in high principles of honor, although Lord Clarendon, a careful and just commentator, in referring to the mission to Charles I entrusted to Davenant by Queen Henrietta Maria which Clarendon thought him ill-fitted for, says incidentally of Davenant: “He was an honest man and a witty.”

During these years of his prosperity, he began to “improve upon " his godfather Shakespeare's plays, in order, as he said, to make them acceptable to the public. Curiously enough, we find that Davenant's last work, in company with Dryden, was to travesty his godfather's play, " The Tempest."

Davenant died April 2nd, 1668, and Pepys, the snob, could not refrain from this comment on his funeral:

" Here were many coaches and six horses, and many hacknies that made it look, methought, as if it were the funeral of a poor poet."

One cannot be too certain but that the adjective was justified in several of its meanings.

Lest anyone may think that the author is intimating that he has discovered a new figure in Maryland history, it should be stated that John Fiske (1897), Bozman (1811), William Hand Browne (1884), Mrs. Hester Dorsey Richardson (1913), Matthew Page Andrews (1929) and Wilstach (1931), all refer, with only minor conflicts and inaccuracies, to the appointment of Sir William Davenant as " Governor " of Maryland.

Wilstach in his recently issued and very entertaining book " Tidewater Maryland " adds a charming touch of color to the story. He says:

" On the same ship with Davenant, Henrietta Maria, the widowed Queen of the beheaded Charles I, also took passage for Maryland, an asylum undoubtedly suggested to her by her attachment to her friends, the Neales."

The Neales were a distinguished family of Southern Maryland. A daughter of Captain James Neale was a lady-in-waiting to and a goddaughter and namesake of Queen Henrietta Maria.

We shall all await with interest the revelation (for which I have written the author) of the sources of this fascinating suggestion, and if they prove of value, another romantic story may be told you next year.

TENCH TILGHMAN'S RIDE.

B. LATROBE WESTON.

When by land and sea with the French allied
The Continentals at Yorktown won,
Came the word to Tench Tilghman to mount and ride
In seventeen hundred and eighty one.
"Colonel Tilghman," spoke Washington, "moments plead;
Bear the tidings to Congress with urgent speed!"

To the saddle sprang Tilghman; within him a flame
Leapt high like a beacon that quenchless must burn.
Now was triumph for toil! He was herald of Fame,
To publish her tidings; nor tarry nor turn
Till to far Philadelphia the shout should extend:
"Cornwallis surrenders; the War's at an end!"

For the country was silent in hushed suspense—
What had chanced in the south since the troops had sailed
On the Bay's broad tide? Would the word borne thence Tell of triumph won or of hope that failed?
And in doubt men were held in the shadow of fear,
As they waited for tidings yet trembled to hear.

And who but Tench Tilghman the news should declare?
Tench Tilghman, long loyal as Washington's aide;
Whose soul was unshaken in seasons of care
Who his part thro' the conflict had valiantly played.
From the rich lands by Maryland's waters he came—
None more gallant in presence or honoured in name.

Now a white-sailed ship from York River's mouth
Thro' the great French fleet bore him northward fast;
While faded from vision the ships in the south,
And sank on the rim of the sky flag and mast.
Shoal and calm vexed his course upon Chesapeake's tide
Three days, ere his prow touched the eastern side.

It was night, but he stayed not for cheer of the sun;

The stars in their courses illumined the sky;

His good horse sprang eager the swift race to run,

And soon in the darkness was uttered the cry

That ever re-echoed should louder ascend:

"Cornwallis surrenders; the War's at an end!"

By farm-houses silent in slumber profound,

By field and by forest he swept on his way;

With rythmical hoof-beats that smote the still ground,

As stretching behind him the vanished miles lay.

He checked not his riding by bridge or by ford;

Resounding planks answered the jangle of sword.

And sleepers, quick startled from dreaming, awoke

To harken as far in the distance the tread

Of a rider who galloped drew nearer; then broke

A cry thro' the darkness and onward he sped.

Thus, swift as an arrow in flight, Tilghman bore

To the land that lay waiting the word from the War.

Now his horse panted breathless, as slackened not his pace;

Yet might not the rider seek comfort or rest.

By deep shadowed homestead he paused in the race,

And the stillness re-echoed his instant behest:

"A fresh horse for Congress!" His sword beat the door;

"Cornwallis is taken," he cried o'er and o'er.

Then lights sprang responsive and answer was given;

And soon he was mounted anew for his ride.

In the star-light he galloped beneath the clear heaven,

And his fresh horse unwearied urged faster his stride.

And as oft as the lengthrening miles made demand,

At the call of his need came a horse to his hand.

Now clear rose the sun and in fields as he rode

The husbandman gathered the fruit of the soil.

"Cornwallis is taken!" The wain with its load

Was halted; the labourer ceased in his toil.

Then was clamor uplifted his course to restrain;
But he pressed toward the goal nor an instant drew rein.

In the mists of the morning by Sassafras' flood
He galloped; the wild fowl upstarting took flight;
The cattle in pastures in wonderment stood,
As flashed the brave rider thro' shadow and light.
Vain was greeting of traveler his riding to stay;
His tidings he cried and was hence on his way.

At morn thro' the white gleam of hoar-frost he dashed;
Until faded the pale light of evening he rode.
He scattered his words like gold pieces that flashed
Far flung from his hand to each waiting abode.
October's ripe store in the fields gathered lay,
And like wine was October's keen air on the way.

In town or in village he slackened his speed;
By store or by tavern the citizens thronged.
From field and from dwelling they hastened to heed,
And he told, as they harkened with cheering prolonged,
How the scarlet-clad lines that were Britain's proud boast
Had yielded their arms to the patriot host.

Now Wilmington heard; still onward he sped;
Amid gathering darkness he thundered along.
Not far was the goal as the miles backward fled;
As his course neared its end he was eager and strong,
For the spirit that strove to bear tidings so great Recked not of the body's o'erwearied estate.

Once again it was night; but his words were like flame
In brushwood, whose tongues of fire multiplied burn.
Thro' the dark hours he sounded his tocsin and came
Ere midnight to Schuylkill's smooth current; and stern
Was his joy as he crossed the broad stream, and his soul
Leapt to greet Philadelphia, the ride's end, the goal.

Straightway thro' the slumbering city he went;
His summons in darkness he called at the door

Of the chief of the Congress: "I'm messenger sent

"By Washington; urgent my haste from the war!"

Thus he spoke to the president, roused from his bed;

"We have taken Cornwallis's army," he said.

From stillness broke tumult; the president gave

The word to the watchmen; loud tolled the great bell.

The city awoke as the guardians grave

Cried and ceased not: "Cornwallis is taken; all's well!"

Lights flashed; from their dwellings with instant accord

To the streets in amazement the citizens poured.

And the tumult of cheer like the flood tide surged on—

"Cornwallis is taken; all's well!" Far and nigh

Resounded the tidings from midnight till dawn,

As thro' turbulent hours rang the watchmen's loud cry.

And thus thro' the night, while the clear stars shone down,

Was the triumph proclaimed in the streets of the town.

From the York to the Schuylkill the great news was borne,

Nor needed henceforward Tench Tilghman's swift steed.

From household to household 'twas carried from morn

To evening, nor hindered the darkness its speed—

Ever onward till Concord and Lexington heard,

That first by the flame of the conflict were stirred.

And abroad thro' the land from the South to the North

Like thunder-roll sounded the call of the ride.

With multiplied echoes the challenge went forth

Over valleys and hills. A Nation replied—

A Nation whose message proclaimed from her birth

Was strange to the Nations that dwelt in the earth.

LAND POLICIES AND ADMINISTRATION IN COLONIAL MARYLAND, 1753-1769.

By PAUL H. GIDDENS.

Land was the chief form of wealth in colonial Maryland; planting the main occupation. Eighty per cent of the people in Maryland in 1750 were engaged in the business of planting in one way or another.¹ Seamen and fishermen, mechanics and merchants, office-holders and lawyers, all were directly or indirectly connected with the cultivation of the soil. Lawyers, doctors, merchants, and shopkeepers invested in land; mechanics and petty tradesmen worked in the fields at tobacco time or helped to harvest wheat and pick corn. On a few plantations good judgment was used in tilling the soil; for the most part, however, farming was crudely done. The plough was little used except to break new ground in the spring and fallow in the fall. The hoe did the work in the tobacco and corn fields; the cheapness of labor made profitable this dull and slow method of tillage. No matter how primitive the method, the soil yielded the people a livelihood and formed the main source of wealth. In consequence, land policies were matters of essential importance to both people and proprietor.

The royal charter created Lord Baltimore and his heirs feudal princes. As territorial lords they had full power to assign, alienate, and grant away parts or parcels on any terms to persons willing to purchase the same. For the management and sale of land the Baltimores had established a land office. A person seeking a grant of vacant land applied to the agent and paid down the purchase or caution money.² His receipt was an order to the judges of the land office for a common warrant for the specified amount of land. The register issued an order, signed by the judges, directed to the surveyor general of the East or West Shore, and in turn the deputy surveyor of the county in which the land lay, surveyed the desired land and returned a warrant describing boundaries and situations to the examiner general. The patent, signed by the chancellor and stamped with the great seal of the province, formed the final and valid title to the tract. Where land taken up had been cultivated by some one not having a right there or where contiguous to land already held by the applicant, the procedure varied. The patentee usually petitioned for a special warrant to survey a specified piece or for a warrant to resurvey his own and include the contiguous tract. The same channels were then followed as for a common warrant, except that the deputy surveyor retained a full description of any improvements happening to be on the land. The judges then appraised them and levied a sum in excess of the purchase price. Every petition, warrant, certificate, and patent was regularly entered in the books of the land office. Horatio Sharpe, Governor of Maryland from 1753 to 1769, could suggest no better methods; there seemed to be little room for fraud or irregularities unless the officials of the land office violated their trusts. Sharpe said it was generally held in all the colonies that no land office was better managed than Maryland's. Surveyors were careful in their descriptions, Sharpe scrutinized every patent before signing, judges and chancellor made sure of the payment of caution money, and the judges reviewed and certified the yearly account of the agent.

The cost of securing title to land through all these steps bore severely on the patentee. According to the elder Daniel Dulany, "Petitions, Draughts of petitions, orders, Warrants, Renewments, Recordings, Surveys, Journey Fees, Platts, Certificates, Recordings again, Examings, Patents, Recordings again, Seals, to say nothing of perquisites, contingent Hearings, & Lawyers fees, are very expensive in Maryland.”³ He estimated that “by the most moderate Computation” the totality of fees collected amounted to 500,000 pounds of tobacco yearly.⁴ Each land officer received compensation in the form of a fee and every December they submitted their several accounts against the patentees and collection was put in the hands of the sheriffs.

The assembly in 1747 attempted to reduce the fees, but the proprietor would brook no interference in an affair which he regarded as strictly his own. Mutterings of discontent against the exorbitant fees continued to be voiced even though there seemed to be no remedy.

Until 1682 the sale and distribution of land was based entirely upon the number of servants imported.⁵ Each settler coming into the colony received 100 acres of land, and for every servant imported an additional grant was made. Everything was done to settle the plantation as rapidly as possible in order to develop the resources and, as a means to this end, the proprietors resorted to the practice of importing servants on a large scale. In a few cases the proprietors granted large tracts to favorites without imposing the requirement to import servants. There was no such thing as direct purchase of land until 1683. In that year, all connections between the distribution of land and the importation of servants came to an end. Title to land henceforth could only be secured by the payment of purchase or caution money. From 1738 to the American Revolution the proprietors sold vacant uncultivated land at the rate of £5 sterling per 100 acres.⁶ Persons willing to take up land along disputed boundaries could obtain it on much more liberal terms.

After 1751, the proprietor persistently tried to raise the price of Maryland land; Governor Sharpe and the chief territorial officials, Colonel Edward Lloyd, Benedict Calvert, and Dr. George Steuart with equal persistence opposed the attempt. It was true that land, both cultivated and uncultivated, sold at a higher level in the neighboring colony of Pennsylvania, but that, held the opponents, was not a sound reason for advancing the price in Maryland. And they gave the reasons for the difference in value.⁷ There was the matter of climate, for the colonies to the north were reputed to be healthier and more temperate than the south. Furthermore, Pennsylvania was more populous than Maryland and almost all were freemen capable of holding land, while one-third of Maryland's population was composed of negro slaves and consequently there were fewer capable of becoming freeholders or increasing their estates. Again the Maryland planter put his surplus capital into slaves, the Pennsylvania farmer bought land. And there was the question of markets. Maryland lacked a constant and certain market such as the farmers to the north found in Philadelphia where prices were generally higher there than anywhere, save Boston and New York, and where ready money was available for produce. Religious liberalism played its part. Every taxable Marylander had to support the established church which dissenters considered a grievous burden and thought their land less valuable than in the Quaker state where religious freedom actually existed. And while the value of land was higher in Pennsylvania, caution money and quitrents were lower than in Maryland. The purchase price of land in Pennsylvania was fixed at £15.10 currency per 100 acres in 1732 with the quitrent at a half-penny per acre. In 1765 the purchase money was reduced to £5.10 per 100 acres, though the quitrent was increased to a penny. The quitrent in Maryland was 4 sh. per 100 acres. If the price of land was raised, immigrants would not push into western Maryland and Lord Baltimore would suffer a loss in revenue. Lastly, Maryland was troubled with boundary disputes and the risks attached to land titles in disputed areas detracted from its value. Unsettled boundary disputes existed with Pennsylvania over the northern border, with Virginia over the southern line, and with Delaware over the eastern limits. These were the factors which made it unwise to raise the price of land in Maryland. Then, too, the French and Indian War killed all hope of raising the price. Governor Sharpe repeatedly informed the proprietor of his inability to raise land prices in view of the enemy roaming over the frontier where most of the vacant land lay.⁸ Few people wanted to buy land over which the savage red man carried destruction. Even if the English triumphed, Sharpe doubted his ability to raise the rates, for the people would then "flock out" to settle on extremely rich and fertile Ohio land which they could get on easy terms. But as soon as the war ended, Secretary Calvert sounded out the leading men in the colony about increasing the price. "It is true," declared the younger Daniel Dulany in a lengthy reply to the query, "Land may rise in its value; but of that there is not a very near prospect to those who reflect what immense Tracts of Land are now to be settled in America in Consequence of our late Acquisitions, & that Land like every other Commodity is valuable, or not, in proportion to its Plenty, or scarcity & must rise very considerably indeed, in the Course of twenty Years to compensate for the Loss of the above Interest, the common quit-rent, the Alienation-fine & the chance of Escheats in the mean time."⁹ On account of these burdens and the enormous fees paid land officials there was little room left for the proprietor to increase the caution money. "I am of Opinion," concluded Dulany, "that, in the present situation of Things, his Lordship wou'd effectually put a stop to the Business of the Land Office, shou'd He raise the Caution-money, unless some method be fallen upon to do it, without increasing the Expence to the Purchaser wch., without Doubt, might be done."¹⁰ Wise advice and opposition from his territorial officers finally influenced the proprietor to give up the idea of raising the purchase price.

Certain relics of feudalism persisted in the colonies. Land was not granted in fee simple; it was burdened with escheat, alienation fines, and quitrent payable into the proprietary purse. The most usual forms of escheating were the lack of heirs and the non-payment of rent.¹¹ The proprietor encouraged the discovery of escheated estates by offering a reward of one-third to the discoverer and first chance to purchase the remainder. One who thought land escheatable for want of heirs might venture the expense of a warrant and a survey. He then paid the price necessary to acquire title which was good so long as no one proved the land not escheated. Few apparently applied for escheat warrants. Opposition to the right of escheats did not develop until about 1760 and from then on to the Revolution it steadily increased. On every alienation or transfer of land a fine equal to one year's rent went to the proprietor.¹² If all transfers had been recorded, collection would not have been difficult. An act of 1715 required all deeds of bargain and sale to be recorded, but since only deeds of bargain and sale were specifically mentioned, people resorted to various devices which did not need recording. The payment of alienation fines, therefore was frequently evaded and the proprietor lost considerable revenue. Secretary Calvert continually urged Sharpe to push the collection of alienation fines, but the officers prevented a vigorous enforcement of the policy.

From the very outset the proprietor reserved to himself a perpetual quitrent on all grants of land. The quitrent was one of the distinctive features of English land-tenure in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. During the Middle Ages, villeins of England gradually commuted their food and labor dues to annual money payments which came to be known as quitrents. By the payment of quitrents land became free from all feudal dues except fealty. The quitrent was naturally enough transplanted to America and became an important feature of the land system of all the colonies except those of New England. The rate stood at 4 sh. per 100 acres in Maryland in 1669, and, except from 1733 to 1738, it remained the same until the Revolution.¹³ Quitrents were payable in sterling, though foreign gold and silver and Maryland paper currency were often received, but the rate of exchange was determined privately between the tenant and receiver.¹⁴ Proprietary instructions specified that foreign gold should pass at the rate of £3.17.6 sterling per ounce and dollars at £4.16 each, but farmers did not always heed the instructions and charged excessive rates of exchange.

Exceptions to the 4 sh. quitrent were sometimes made for definite purposes. In 1732 Lord Baltimore made a liberal offer to Germans who should settle on land between the Potomac and Susquehanna Rivers.¹⁵ Every person having a family might obtain 200 acres at a rental of 4 sh. per 100 acres; the rent was not payable until the beginning of the third year. Single persons between fifteen and thirty years of age could secure 100 acres on the same terms. Exemption from the quitrent was sometimes granted to those who would settle near disputed boundary lines. Otherwise, the rate remained uniform.

Lord Baltimore was bent on raising not only the price of vacant land, but also on advancing the quitrent from 4 to 10 sh. per 100 acres, a raise be it said of 250 per cent.¹⁶ The aggregate revenue from this source would have meant much to the proprietor's pocket book at the expense of the planters and farmers. There seemed to be no end to the arbitrary demands of his lordship. Why it should be raised cannot be explained except by the proprietor's cupidity. As it was, the Maryland quitrent was higher than in any other colony. Governor Sharpe stoutly opposed the advance, holding it to be decidedly unwise. He presented much the same line of reasoning used against raising the price of land.¹⁷ A population growing at a tremendous rate and the consequent pressure on the land, the law of supply and demand, gave occasion for the increase of both the purchase money and quitrent in Pennsylvania. Maryland, however, lacked those who would become tenants, the demand for land was not pressing, and the demand for agricultural products was smaller. And, indeed, already quitrents were higher in Maryland than Pennsylvania and twice as high as Virginia where land was more fertile. Sharpe told Baltimore not to forget such items as the clergy tax and alienation fines. The colonial land officials agreed with Sharpe's stand in opposition. As it was, the quitrent now formed a burden of no mean severity on the settlers and acted as a break on the coming of new people. The proprietor heeded this advice and curbed his arbitrary demand.¹⁸ Maryland's system of gathering the quitrents was the most effective employed on the continent. Such is the judgment of a scholar expert in the history of colonial quitrent.¹⁹ On the East shore sheriffs collected the rents on a ten per cent commission; on the Western Shore they were farmed out on a twenty per cent basis. Every collector gave security and was under the direct supervision of a rent roll keeper, one for each shore. Two keepers, appointed by the governor, received a five per cent commission on all collections within their respective districts. They transmitted all receipts to the agent and kept the rent roll of each county, from which they annually made out the debt books for the farmers. The debt books formed the basis for collection.

It was one of Governor Sharpe's tasks to work out a less expensive and more effective system of collection. Lord Baltimore, demanding more and more revenue, insisted that the sheriffs be compelled, as a part of their duty, to collect the quit-rents on a ten per cent basis. Owing to the short interval between Sharpe's arrival in 1753 and the expiration of the farmer's contracts in the same year, the governor could not arrange with the sheriffs, so the contracts were renewed for two more years.²⁰ Sharp managed, however, to strike a better bargain with the farmers; they agreed to accept fifteen per cent. When these contracts expired in 1755, the sheriffs agreed to collect the rents for ten per cent.²¹ The proprietor, in his desire for money, urged a reduction to six per cent. Sharpe did not see how it could be done, for the sheriffs found the task both unprofitable and unpleasant at ten per cent.²² Gladly would they have welcomed exemption from the duty. The sheriff of Frederick county resigned in 1764 rather than make the collections and not a man of any property would accept the office. The annual rents in most counties did not amount to £500 sterling. If a sheriff received every shilling, his commission would fall short of £50 sterling. In a few counties it hardly amounted to one-half that sum. Notwithstanding all diligence and care not a few sheriffs suffered losses.²³ They had to account for tracts on which rent could not be collected and many lands had nothing to distrain. Some owners lived at such distances outside the county that to go for the rent caused greater expense than the amount collected. Moreover, a farmer had to make, in some instances, several trips to get rents from those living upon the lands. It is small wonder the governor protested against a reduction of the commission to the low level of six per cent. Should the commission be reduced, Sharpe suggested that one person be allowed to farm three or four counties thereby making the compensation worth while.²⁴ Otherwise, no one could be induced to farm the rents.

Two years' experience convinced Sharpe that the use of the office of sheriff was most unsatisfactory.²⁵ Rents were not collected with regularity and paid to the agent because other public duties engrossed the time of the sheriffs and the task was given to deputies. The situation induced Sharpe and the Board of Revenue to divorce the collection of rents from the sheriff's office and entrust the task to responsible persons especially appointed for the purpose. Also by uniting two or more smaller counties into one farm and allowing an adequate commission better men were induced to accept the office. Placing the collection of the rents upon a more business-like basis throws light upon Sharpe's administrative abilities.

The effective and full collection of the rents demanded that the rent rolls be in good order. From 1717 to 1732 the proprietor accepted 2 sh. a hogshead on all tobacco exported in lieu of quitrents and alienation fines.²⁶ In 1732 the assembly refused to continue the agreement and Baltimore was forced to reform his system of collection. The period of commutation permitted the rent rolls to fall into confusion; vast amounts of land no longer appeared on the rolls. By searching through the land records new rolls could be made, but it was a difficult task and one requiring time; it called for a thorough search to compile a perfect record of every owner, the acreage, and rent payable. A hard problem at best was made more so by the rent roll keepers who entertained their offices as sinecures. In 1753 the proprietor demanded that the rolls be made out annually and in detail and presented for his scrutiny.²⁷ Over and again Sharpe urged the land officials to complete the rent rolls, but the work went slowly.²⁸ Edward Tilghman and Colonel Edward Lloyd, rent roll keepers for the East and West Shores, respectively, lacked a cooperative spirit. Tilghman often gave assurance, however, that he was doing his best to complete the rolls. His failure to perform promptly this duty was not the only objection against Tilghman holding the office. It is evident that Tilghman was careless, for he permitted farmers of the revenue on the Eastern Shore to appropriate rent money for their own private use; they were also in great arrears with their accounts. Colonial Lloyd's punctuality in completing the rolls was no better than Tilghman's. He finally completed the rolls for Anne Arundel, Charles, and Calvert counties for 1753, but upon inspection by the proprietor they did not conform to the detailed instructions sent in 1752.²⁹ "Colonel Lloyd," declared the Governor Sharpe, "has for his part been always full of Professions and Promises that no one should have reason to complain of any Neglect in him, but by Your Account I think He seems as culpable as any one." Sharpe asked Lloyd and Tilghman so many times to complete the rolls that he was sure he had more than once offended them. Finally, in exasperation, the Governor gave Lloyd peremptory instructions in 1756 to demand all the rents, books and papers from Tilghman and then dismiss him.³⁰ Lloyd replied that Tilghman must be retained or Lord Baltimore's affairs would suffer and refused to remove him. Sharpe permitted the land agent to continue Tilghman in office a short time longer on the condition that he get all the papers and books and then make final settlement. Tilghman was dismissed and thereupon assumed the leadership of the anti-government party. Nothing had given Sharpe so much uneasiness as his inability to please the proprietor by perfecting the rent rolls. "Those whose Duty it is to settle & manage your Lordships Pecuniary Affairs," Sharpe declared in 1756, "are perpetually blaming each other & endeavouring to vindicate their own Conduct."³¹ With much trouble and a great expenditure of time Sharpe prepared the rent roll of Anne Arundel county to serve as a model.³² Through personal exhortations, instructions from the proprietor, and removal of inefficient officials, Sharpe finally managed to have the rent rolls perfected by 1767, another significant achievement to his credit.

Obviously, the completion of the rent rolls increased the total rents collected. The increase came in spite of the Indian pressure on the frontier which forced the western settlers to hurry to the more settled areas. The annual rent return rose from £5,752 in 1753 to £8,383 in 1761.³³ When the hostilities of the Revolutionary Era opened the quitrents in Maryland were twice as large as the returns from this source in any other colony.³⁴ The quitrents in Pennsylvania from 1701 to 1778 amounted to £182,248. 12. 10, but only £63,697. 8. 3, or a little over a third was collected. Collections were equally as bad in New York, East Jersey, West Jersey, Georgia, North and South Carolina.³⁵ A number of factors explain why the quit-rent system was so successful in Maryland: exorbitant and confusing rates, as in Pennsylvania, were avoided, an excellent system of collection with ample commissions to competent collectors was developed, and a disposition to be moderate in the method of enforcement and the medium of payment.

Owing to the able, consistent, and broad-minded policy of the Maryland proprietors and their officials, the quitrents were paid with less opposition than in any other colony, save perhaps Virginia. There was no wide-spread opposition to the quitrent system after 1745. Prior to that date illegal fees, illegal rates for gold, and over-charging caused numerous complaints.³⁶ In 1754, Colonel Lloyd, the land agent, required all farmers and receivers of quitrents to advertise in the most public places at what rates they would receive foreign coin in lieu of sterling. Henceforth, no farmer dared raise his demands and the system ran more smoothly. Regarding the administration of the quit-rent, a leading authority has said, "Under their (the Baltimores) careful supervision a system of quit-rents was established and enforced in Maryland, which was more successful in its actual results than any similar organization in the American colonies either proprietary or royal."³⁷

Large quantities of vacant and uncultivated land still remained in nearly all parts of Maryland. But the practice of locating land warrants by selecting the most fertile areas without regard to regularity of shape or making it coincide with the boundary of land previously granted left the vacant land in such irregular and small parcels that it was of little value.³⁸ In 1760 Governor Sharpe said he doubted whether as much as 5,000 acres of good vacant land could be found in one spot unless it was in the extreme western portion of the colony.³⁹ Significant is the observation of Daniel Dulany who wrote in 1764, "In a few years there will be very little vacant Land, & therefore, there will be probably more Attention bestow'd upon the Improvement of the manors, or reserved Lands."⁴⁰ up, yet in 1754 vast areas of "surplus" land remained.⁴¹ Early surveyors granted certificates of survey which included a larger amount of land than the warrant certified. In some cases, ten times as much land was included in a survey as specified in the warrant. It may have been due to ignorance; perhaps there was knavery; it may have been a matter of indifference to the surveyors when land was so abundant. At any rate, this "surplus" land, as it was termed, paid neither purchase money nor quitrent. The three counties of Baltimore, Cecil, and Prince George contained a third more land than was paid for.⁴² The proprietor directed the surveyor general to make a diligent search for the "surplus," but the resumption of this land was very difficult. With the hope of encouraging voluntary resurveys the proprietor offered landowners the privilege of taking up the "surplus" providing the arrearages were paid from the date of the patent.⁴³ Governor Sharpe found it unnecessary to issue any proclamation inciting people to apply for resurvey warrants, for some were seriously trying to remove every possibility of boundary disputes.⁴⁴ Many gentlemen holding large tracts would not resurvey, however, upon the conditions proposed. Sharpe thought that if surplus land could be taken up at the original rent rate and the payment of all arrearages waived, most of them would apply for a resurvey warrant. The proprietary revenue would be thereby immediately and perpetually increased. A scheme, slightly different from the one Sharpe suggested, was adopted in 1756.⁴⁵ Those resurveying within two years and returning a certificate of the true amount might have the surplus by paying the purchase price and quitrent as expressed in the original grant, but arrearages were not demanded. Surveys on a large scale were not undertaken, however, and we hear of no more attempts to induce landowners to take up the surplusage.

Maryland was not a colony made up chiefly of large and princely estates. The average holding of land in a single county ranged from 250 to 475 acres. The nearer to Annapolis, center of politics and of the aristocratic class, the larger the holding.⁴⁶ The average holding per landowner in the various counties, ranging in order from high to low, were as follows: Anne Arundel 472.8, Cecil 371.9, Frederick 370.1, Calvert 364.1, and Talbot 329.5 acres.⁴⁷ In Kent, St. Mary, and Worcester, the older counties, the average ran 279.6, 282, and 255.3 acres, respectively. And it is noteworthy that nearly one-fourth of all the land in the older counties was held in quantities varying from 50 to 250 acres by men who owned no other land.⁴⁸ Indeed, the average plantation of a middle class landowner approximated 100 to 250 acres cultivated by the owner and family or with the aid of a few slaves.⁴⁹

Above the numerous group of average landholders stood the landed aristocracy which gathered wealth and prestige from vast estates. These properties consisted for the most part of many scattered tracts rather than of single large plantation surrounding the owner's residence. Daniel Dulany possessed one of the largest and most scattered estates, and the Carroll family held land in almost every county on the Western Shore. The dwelling plantations of some of the more important landholders, however, were very large. Talbot county, the home of many aristocratic families, embraced many of the largest plantations. The assessment of that county in 1783 listed sixty-seven plantations averaging 615 acres with as much as 200 acres cleared land.⁵⁰ It is probable that in no other part of the province was there such an abundance of large farms.

Huge tracts of land were purchased either for speculative purposes or because of a natural desire to provide for one's children. Land was plentiful in early colonial times and men patented vast tracts. Since they could not possibly cultivate it all, they lived on a corner and reserved the remainder for their children. "They who have children to provide for," declared Daniel Dulany in 1764, "keep their Land with that View, it is a kind of property less slippery, than money is, in the Hands of Young or Improvident People."⁵¹ Those not holding land for the enrichment of family estates used it for speculative purposes. William Eddis wrote in 1772, "Lands, to a very Considerable extent, are taken up by persons, who looking to futurity for greater advantages, are content to clear gradually some portions of their domains for immediate subsistence."⁵² The western land boom began when skilled German farmers without money and a knowledge of the English language, began migrating across Maryland's northern boundary in 1730. Unable to buy land and without any great aversion to becoming tenants, they played directly into the hands of the speculator. Land held for speculation was unimproved. A tax collector reported in 1757 that of the 537,500 acres patented in Frederick county 62,042 acres of uncultivated land were owned by people in Baltimore, Anne Arundel, Prince George, and Charles counties.⁵³ Daniel Dulany, the elder, was one of the largest and most successful western land dealers and upon his land was founded one of the earliest German settlements. Another noted speculator was Jonathan Hagar, who "purchased a considerable tract of land in this neighborhood, and with much discernment and foresight, determined to give encouragement to traders, and to erect proper habitations for the storage of goods, for the supply of the adjacent country. His plan succeeded: he has lived to behold a multitude of inhabitants on land which he remembered unoccupied; and he has seen erected in places appropriated by him for that purpose, more than a hundred comfortable edifices, to which the name of Hagar's Town is given in honor of the intelligent founder."⁵⁴ Most of the speculation was carried on by dealing in warrants which were transferable and divisible. They could be repeatedly renewed or else the land could be surveyed and a certificate returned but left to lay. In this manner, control over large tracts was insured without having to pay the quitrent and yet one was free to dispose of it in parcels.

It should also be noted that planters held more land than they could immediately improve, not only for speculative purposes or for their children, but for other reasons. They held virgin tracts which might be available when the land under cultivation was exhausted. Tobacco, by its great value in exchange, its high yield per acre, its good keeping qualities, and comparatively low weight when ready for shipment, excluded all other major crops from the fields and forced an exhausting single-crop type of agriculture upon the soil.⁵⁵ The tobacco plant was a heavy consumer of both nitrogen and potash, and removal of the entire crop from the field caused a rapid decline in available plant food materials. Continued replanting also encouraged toxicity, harmful soil fungi, and root rats. Superior tobacco could only be produced on fresh lands, for after the second crop quality and quantity declined. A planter seldom counted upon more than two or three crops from land before abandoning it to corn, wheat, and pine. There was constant clearing of forests and constant abandonment of old fields. Large tracts of virgin land were, therefore, essential for tobacco cultivation.

As desirable vacant land gradually disappeared and patented land increased in value, leasing became a popular means of developing large landed estates.⁵⁶ A lease for twenty-one years was the most common, but five, seven, or fourteen year periods were not unusual. A desire to have relief from the trouble of changing tenants and a tenant's desire to have improvements resulted in a very popular long term lease which generally ran for three lives. Rents on leased land varied from 10 sh. to £10 sterling per 100 acres, depending upon the location, quality of soil, improvements, bargaining power, and the date of leasing. About 1750 a desirable plantation containing 150 to 200 acres rented for £5 to £8 currency per year. The average size leaseholds contained from 100 to 150 acres. One hundred acres, however, seemed to be the usual size; nearly one-fourth of all the leases recorded during the first half of the eighteenth century were for that amount.

Waste of the tenants was one of the great disadvantages of the leasing system.⁵⁷ Especially was this true in tobacco cultivation. The first few crops from new ground were the heaviest and after they were off the soil was of little value for agricultural purposes until it lay fallow for a period of years. Tenants on the proprietor's manors planted so much tobacco during the last years of their terms that the soil was left impoverished and untenable. Another general complaint against leasing was the fact that tenants often cut off all the timber for clapboards, stores, shingles, rails, and left little wood. The profitableness of leasing was seriously questioned. "Every Gentleman who lets out Land in this Country, knows," wrote Daniel Dulany in 1764, "how difficult it is, with the utmost Care, to make any considerable profit by that scheme, & how impractical it is to get an annual Rent equal to half the Interest wch wou'd arise from the money, for which the Land wou'd sell, or to prevent the Abuses of Tenants in the Commission of waste."⁵⁸

Estates might also be worked through the employment of an overseer, who took complete charge of the cultivation of the plantation, supervised the erection of all buildings and fences, and occasionally performed other duties.⁵⁹ Overseers generally came from the best of the landless class, for no landlord would be liable to place slaves, implements, and land in charge of any but a competent and reliable man. The overseer was usually hired for a year. He was either paid a fixed salary, varying from £10 to £30 per year, or, as in most cases, given a share in the crop which depended upon the number of slaves worked. A crop was ordinarily divided into as many shares as slaves; one share went to the overseer and the rest to the owner. Sometimes an overseer was permitted to cultivate patches of corn or wheat and keep driving-horses, cattle, hogs, and sheep. If he lived on the plantation, the overseer generally received lodging, board, washing, and mending. Otherwise, only provisions were supplied.

The overseer system seems to have been more profitable than leasing. Cheap slave labor produced a surplus so large that landlord and overseer could divide and each have a greater return than where the land was rented for a fixed sum. Besides, the waste of timber and the exhaustion of the soil could be prevented. All great landowners and wealthy men had numerous plantations worked under this system.

Proprietary manors were divided into small holdings and leased like lands of private citizens. While an abundance of cheap land existed during the seventeenth century, many manors had few tenants, boundaries disappeared, squatters took possession, leases were lost, and the rents were not paid. After the Restoration, tenants could be secured much easier and an increasing amount of proprietary land was leased. Kent Manor alone had fifty-seven tenements in 1764, most of which were rented.⁶⁰ Although rents on the proprietor's land were somewhat lower than on private lands, the manors never were entirely leased out. Proprietary leases were quite similar to those on private lands.⁶¹ They ran from five to twenty-one years or three lives with a tendency toward the latter. Longer terms were refused. The tenants of Anne Arundel manor in 1752 tried to secure leases for ninety-nine years renewable forever. If the proprietor had agreed to the proposition, all benefits from an increase in land values would have been lost.

Manor rents were almost uniformly 10 sh. per 100 acres in the earlier part of the eighteenth century. As lands became more valuable, the proprietor advanced the price on the expiration of leases. Rents in Baltimore and Frederick counties were raised in 1754 from 10 to 20 sh. per 100 acres.⁶² If the French and Indian War had not interfered, they could have been raised still higher. Anne Arundel county was far enough removed from the frontier so that the rents there were raised in 1755 from £3.15 to £5 per 100 acres.⁶³

Questions relating to terms of leases, sales, and the laying out of new manors were determined by the governor and agent while the routine work of finding tenants, leasing the lands, and collecting rents was done by stewards under the agent's supervision.⁶⁴ A steward frequently had charge of several manors. Young Parran was at one time steward of no less than eleven manors in Charles and St. Mary counties. Free tenure on one tenement was a steward's usual compensation. When a person wished to lease proprietary land the steward surveyed a tract, returned the certificate, together with the lease, to the agent; the governor and agent examined and signed it, and the lease was then delivered to the lessee. Each steward kept a roll in which all leases were recorded and it showed the amount of rent due.

Governor Sharpe discovered that proprietary manors were by no means efficiently managed; leases had been lost, rents had fallen into arrears, tenants had pillaged the land, and the constant cultivation of tobacco impoverished the soil.⁶⁵ Stewards, whose duty it was to see that the manors were well tenanted and managed, had allowed them to fall into a disorderly state.

Soon after Sharpe's arrival in 1753, he immediately made several practical recommendations for improving manorial administration.⁶⁶ Stewards should be allowed a large commission on the annual rents instead of a mere free tenement; persons of ability might thereby be encouraged to become stewards. If a steward was not sufficiently paid for getting the manor settled and rents duly paid, he would not be very solicitous to procure good tenants. By advertising the terms of leasing, Sharpe thought better tenants might be secured. There should be a book for every manor where all leases and agreements as well as a detailed description could be entered. Furthermore, every steward should make a plot of the manors under his supervision and mark down every tenement as it was leased. When the time came to account for the revenue the agent might easily see from the plat what parts were settled and those vacant. Finally, rents should be regularly paid on a certain day, for as Sharpe said, "I am persuaded that nothing is so detrimental as giving them long credit."⁶⁷ Unless the proprietor approved of these suggested changes and directed the agent to enforce them, the governor saw little hope for increasing returns from the manors. Nothing was done immediately to improve the administration of manor lands because the attention of Lloyd, the land agent, was too much engrossed by his own private affairs.

Shortly after his arrival in the colony Governor Sharpe received directions to have more land erected into manors. No tract could be found in 1754 extensive enough to answer the purpose, except in Frederick county near the frontier.⁶⁸ Even after an investigation of that region, the deputy surveyor reported neither he nor his associates knew of any parcel of vacant land in the inhabited portion of the county which contained 5,000 acres.⁶⁹ Acting under the governor's orders, a survey was made in 1768 just beyond Fort Cumberland and a manor containing 96,610 acres was laid out.⁷⁰ Some of it was very good land and would have rented for 10 sh. per 100 acres, but the greatest part was mountainous. Four other manors, all lying along the branches of the Youghiogheny, were laid out in the same year.

Although the manors brought in as much as £1,000 revenue per year, the proprietor decided in 1765 for some unknown reason to sell his uncultivated, untenanted manors and reserved lands. He may have been influenced by Daniel Dulany who argued that the revenue from the manors was not sufficient to pay the interest on the capital invested. In all probability the most influential reason was the fact that the sale would provide a source of ready money. Sharpe strongly advised against selling any of the manors. He suggested that every one should be leased on such terms as would add something annually to the proprietor's revenue.⁷¹ Furthermore, the governor forcibly called attention to the fact that if it was worth while for gentlemen to purchase these lands at a high price with no other view than leasing them, it was worth while for Lord Baltimore to keep them. Sharpe was confident that if the manors were properly managed, the rents would amount to a considerable sum. But in a letter to Sharpe, Lloyd, Calvert, Dulany, Steuart, and Key, the proprietor declared the manors yielded nothing and prevented the increase of people so he authorized them to sell the following lands:⁷²

Edward Lloyd informed them that these lands were all tenanted or at least a considerable part.⁷³ He produced a list of tenants on some of the tracts and said the rents, though not over 10 sh. per 100 acres, had been regularly accounted for. The commissioners thereupon concluded not to sell any land until further information could be procured. Without it, they could not properly determine the sale price.

The commissioners adjourned to meet later, but before Lloyd could make a report, John Morton Jordan, a London merchant, arrived in Maryland with a commission authorizing Sharpe, Dulany, and himself to sell all cultivated as well as uncultivated reserved lands and manors.⁷⁴ According to the instructions, the following manors were to be offered for sale:⁷⁵

The proprietor directed the commissioners to divide these manors into tracts not exceeding 500 acres where the land was already under cultivation, nor over 1,000 acres where uncultivated. Each tract should be auctioned off to the highest bidder, but cultivated and untenanted lands were not to be sold for less than £30 sterling per 100 acres, and so on in proportion for a greater or lesser quantity. Cultivated and tenanted land should be sold for not less than £100 sterling for every 100 acres subject to the present quitrent. All tracts were to be sold subject to an alienation fine of not less than one year's rent and a quitrent of 8 or 9 sh., but not less than 4. To defray the expenses of surveying, 6d. sterling per 100 acres was to be levied on all land sold, no matter what kind. One-fourth of the purchase money had to be paid down either in specie or good bills of exchange and the rest could be secured by a purchaser's bond until paid within three years. No interest was to be charged for the first year, but thereafter, the debt bore six per cent. Should the tracts fail to bring the amounts indicated, they were to be put on the block at a subsequent date. If not sold then, a private sale might be negotiated. For their trouble the commissioners were each to receive £2 for every £100 of purchase money paid down.

The commissioners began selling the manors during the summer of 1766, but the demand for land was not so great as anticipated. There were few bidders and lands were repeatedly withdrawn from sale. The proprietor's tenants, who could have afforded to give more for their respective tenements than others persons, were, in general, very poor and neighbors seemed unwilling to over-bid them. Scarcity of specie also hindered the sale. When the small manor of Collington was put on the block only one parcel of 65 acres and another 200-acre tract would sell.⁷⁶ Anne Arundel manor was put up in 100-acre tracts in June, 1767, but no one would bid though many tenants were present.⁷⁷ The commissioners thereupon gave notice that, since tenants declined to bid, the manor would be divided into 400 or 500-acre tracts and auctioned again. In September, 7,104 $\frac{7}{8}$ acres were sold for £8,919. 1. 9 $\frac{3}{4}$. Most of this land was purchased by tenants for 25 to 35 sh. per acre. Three thousand acres failed to sell. Manors in Kent and Queen Anne counties were offered to the public, but no land was sold in the former and only 822 acres in the latter.⁷⁸ Only 2,477 $\frac{3}{4}$ acres could be sold from the manors in St. Mary and Prince George counties. By the spring of 1768, the commissioners had sold 17,015 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres for £18,341. 12. 5.⁷⁹ Among the larger purchasers were: Dr. George Steuart, Richard Sprigg, Henry Hall, President Tasker, Charles Carroll of Carrollton, Charles Carroll of Annapolis, James Dick, Samuel Galloway, Thomas and John Snowden, John Stevenson, and William Hollyday.⁸⁰ The sale continued even after the end of Governor Sharpe's administration, and by 1773 nearly 50,000 acres had been sold.⁸¹

Receipts from the quitrents, the ordinary sale of land, and manor rents brought an enormous revenue to the proprietor. Eddis said in 1772 that the annual revenue of the proprietor arising from the sale of lands and quitrents, after deducting all the various charges of government, averaged £12,500 per year.⁸² The murderous raids of the French and Indians upon the frontier, however, caused a steady decrease in the land revenue from 1754 to 1760.⁸³ The assembly would not grant supplies acceptable to the proprietor and adequate protection was not provided for the frontier tenants. Quitrents could not be collected and people were deterred from taking up land. "The Proprietary has lost a vast country by our unhappy disputes," declared Daniel Dulany in 1755, "and the business of the Land Office has greatly decreased, and if some method is not speedily fallen upon to settle matters I can foresee that this Province will be brought to the greatest distress, and the Proprietary's revenue considerably diminished."⁸⁴ Not only did the revenue of the proprietor dwindle, but also that of other large landowners. "When the times will mend," asked Sharpe in 1757, "who can fortell? but I may venture to pronounce that if our Affairs do not assume a better Face soon the most frugal of us will be unable to make any great Addition to their Fortunes."⁸⁵

Revenue from the proprietor's vast estate would have been greater notwithstanding the war, had the agent and receiver general, Colonel Edward Lloyd, been more efficient in its management. "The Land Office," said Sharpe, "is a great Trust & of the utmost Consequence to all concerned; therefore requires real Fidelity & the best Abilities for due Execution. Much Waste has been & now is of Quit Rent not in Possession, of the Proprietor . . . the present Condition & Management of the Office is a Reproach of Misdemeanor in publick Employment."⁸⁶ Undoubtedly Lloyd's failure to attend properly to the proprietary business resulted in shameful financial losses. "The Truth is as I have often said," declared Sharpe in accounting for the trouble, "that it is impossible for a Person who has such a Multiplicity of Business of his own to mind & so large an Estate to manage to give so much Attention as he ought to your Ldp's Affairs especially when he lives at a great distance from hence where most of the Business must necessarily be done." ⁸⁷ No agent could have been more delinquent than Lloyd. Failure to correspond frequently with the Lord Baltimore and Calvert about the business caused no little uneasiness. On one occasion Lloyd neglected to answer proprietary inquiries for over nine months. At another time fourteen months elapsed before he answered the proprietor.⁸⁸ Neglect to remit the revenue punctually caused greater anxiety. He was at least two years in arrears with his accounts in 1755 and when the proprietor finally received the remittance there were no vouchers. On account of these and other numerous delinquencies Lloyd rapidly and steadily lost favor with the proprietor and Secretary Calvert.⁸⁹ Sharpe repeatedly urged him to be more punctual in the performance of his duties, but frequent reminders only created ill will. Lloyd resented the governor's interference and told him so.⁹⁰ While dissatisfied with his poor management and aware of the heavy financial losses, Lord Baltimore dared not dismiss Lloyd, for he was a man of power and influence. His resignation would have been an "Upright and generous" act, but Lloyd continued to hold the office until 1768 when a new plan for the management of the land office went into effect.

Since Lloyd would not resign and it was impractical to remove him, Secretary Calvert proposed a plan in 1759 that would make the agent responsible to a revenue board.⁹¹ Several objections against the scheme were raised by Sharpe who outlined his own ideas about the proper management of the proprietary business and forwarded them to Lord Baltimore. His recommendations received the hearty approval of the proprietor who immediately asked Sharpe to transmit instructions for the agent embodying his reorganization scheme.⁹² The governor complied with the request, but cautioned the proprietor not to give Colonel Lloyd any reason to think he had been deficient in the discharge of his duty lest he become a "little piqued."

Early in 1763 Colonel Lloyd received Lord Baltimore's instructions containing Sharpe's plan, which directed him to purchase or construct a building suitable for housing all duplicate leases, rent rolls, manor plats, debt books, farmers' bonds and contracts, naval officers' accounts, and all other papers relating to the proprietary revenue.⁹³ This building was to be known as "The Office of the Receiver General." Stewards were directed to make up their accounts regularly on a certain day and if negligent, removal was the penalty. All directions from the agent to the stewards were to be made in writing. In order that tenants might not be imposed upon, the agent must give notice in each county of the conditions upon which manors would be rented or granted. As soon as possible after September 29, every year, the naval officers, sheriffs, stewards, and receivers of alienation fines were to settle with the agent. He should then close his account and submit it to a Board of Revenue, composed of the governor, commissary general, secretary, judges of the land office, and attorney general, or any three, for examination. If they approved the account, it was to be signed and transmitted to the proprietor.

Colonel Lloyd told Sharpe he would endeavor to execute the instructions, but took exception to the part obligating him to lay his accounts before the Board.⁹⁴ He was afraid Dulany and Steuart, members of the Board with whom he had suits at law, would be disposed to make trouble for him. The governor tried to allay his apprehensions, but without success. Lloyd proceeded in a very dilatory manner to carry out the instructions. He purchased in 1763 a site for the land office in Annapolis. Sharpe often pressed him to proceed with the construction and Lloyd always promised action, yet did nothing until 1766. In that year construction began and the building was soon ready for occupancy.

On April 5, 1768, the Board of Revenue composed of Governor Sharpe, Daniel and Walter Dulany, Benedict Calvert, and Dr. George Steuart met for the first time. Lloyd submitted his account and after the first audit resigned, a long wished for event. With Lloyd out and a responsible board in control, prospects for a better administration of the land business seemed brighter than ever before. But the appointment of the Reverend Bennett Allen, a notorious character and favorite of the proprietor, as agent and receiver general showed that Lord Baltimore was entirely unfit to be the head of a state. Hopes for a more efficient land administrator were blasted. Probably because Allen could not provide ample security, the proprietor ordered Sharpe to remove him within six months after his appointment. Mathew Tilghman was selected, but he declined the office, and Daniel of St. Thomas Jenifer was appointed. Allen would not, however, vacate the office or surrender the books and papers without direct instructions from the proprietor. After trying four months to persuade him to relinquish the post, the Board put his bond in suit; that finally forced him to retire in favor of Jenifer.

During the first year of its existence the Board of Revenue met often and exercised close supervision over the proprietor's financial affairs. They prepared written orders for every officer who had any connection with the collection of the revenue, they required acceptable bonds of the farmers and rent roll keepers, they hired and fired farmers and stewards, granted leases, examined accounts, and looked after every other matter pertaining to the revenue. The policy of the Board was always firm yet conciliatory and every action revealed a desire to promote the best interests of the proprietor. Responsible and centralized control had at last been substituted for careless, indifferent, and irresponsible management.

Not content with these reforms, the proprietor created in 1768 the office of "Supervisor of Accounts Lands and Revenues" and appointed John Morton Jordan of London to the post.⁹⁵ Jordan was to correspond with persons qualified to give information or assistance for improving the collection of Lord Baltimore's revenue and the better regulation of the manors. Every year the Board of Revenue was to send a double set of accounts to England, one to Jordan for his inspection and the other to Secretary Hamersley. Furthermore, the Board was to "receive and pay proper Attention to whatever Information and Assistance the said John Morton Jordan may from Time to Time communicate thereon."

The reorganization of the land office was the last of a series of notable reforms in land policies and administration instituted and carried through largely by the efforts of Governor Sharpe. From both the proprietary and people's point of view his record as a land administrator is one of great achievement. His wise and successful opposition to raising the price of land and the quitrents favored the planters. On the other hand, his working out a more effective method of collecting the quitrents and perfecting the rent rolls favored his employer. The strenuous efforts made to discover surplus land were not only beneficial to the proprietor but also to the planters who wanted to remove all grounds for boundary disputes. Where possible, rents on the proprietary domains were increased and responsible management for those immense holdings provided. Delinquent and inefficient officials, who looked upon their offices as sinécures, were dismissed and competent men took their places. A Board of Revenue was created and given unlimited power over all proprietary finances. Finally, a land office was constructed where all papers and books relating to the revenue might be safely deposited. Every possible effort had been made by Governor Sharpe to eliminate disorder, dishonesty, injustice, and procrastination from the administration of the land office. As a result, many causes of complaint against an office of so vital importance to both the proprietor and the people were removed.

Salvatoris in Burgo de South warke Victualler anno agens 43 aut circiter testis in hac parto productus juratus et examinatus dicit quoad Willielmus Cleborne partem producentem per spatium viginte annorum aut eo circiter ultima elapsorum bena

novit et Georgiani Evelyn unam partem contra quam producentem per spatium octo an noeum etiam ultini elapsorum bene novit; reliquas vero partes contra quas producuntur non novit, ut dicit.

Ad 6^m articulum libelli ex parte ante dicti Cleborne in hac parte dati et admitti deponit et dicit that within the time libellate the articulate Shippe the Affrica arrived at the Isle of Kent in Virginia, and all the goodes in the said shippe were there unladen and putt in warehouses and storehouses which the articulate Cleborne had provided there for the companyes good, for whom he was ffactor or agent, and within tenn or twelve dayes after the said goodes were put into the said houses there casually happened a lamentable and fearefull fire which in shorte time consumed and burnte downe the said houses and all the goodes in them. And when the said fire happened the said Cleborne was gone into the country aboute the companyes affaires. The premisses he knoweth to bee true for that hee was then at the Isle of Kent where the said fire was and sawe the same, being at that tyme servant to the said Cleborne. Ac aliter nescit.

Ad 8^m deponit et dicit That for the space of three or fower yeares after the fire aforesaid there came noe supplye that ever this examiniate could heare of from the companye aforesaid; but at the laste there came a small supplye in a shippe to his best remembrance called the Mayflower, of which one Andrewes was master; but what those thinges which they then sent, or what certainly was the name of the shippe in which they came he cannot remember. And hee doth not remember or know of any other supplye which the said Cleborne afterwards had from the said Company at any tyme. The premises he affirmeth to be true beinge parte of the tyme a servant to the said Cleborne and afterwards liveinge the next dore to the said Cleborne and eating and drinkeinge with him almoste every daye for the space of seaven or eight yeares after.

Ad 7^m deponit et dicit That after the disaster aforesaid the said Cleborne did write letters to the articulate Cloberry and company to intimate unto them what had happened and withall to entreate them that in case they would adventure further with him uppon the plantacion that they should speedily send him over goodes and what goodes they should send and that in the meane tyme hee the said Cleborne would maintaine and uphold the said plantacion out of his owne estate and credit which hee had there which hee knoweth to bee true for that hee heard the said Cleborne reade over the same letters to one Mr James minister uppon that plantacion and the said Cleborne did after the premisses releve and furnishe some of the foresaid companyes servants according to their necessities with such provision and other thinges of his owne which hee had or could procure there. Ac aliter nescit.

Ad 9^m deponit et dicit That by reason of the said fire and the neglecte of the company in not sending over sufficient supplye of municion and other necessities which the said Cleborne and company then stooode in neede of and dayly almoste Expected notwithstanding what the said Cleborne out of his owne stocke and credit did bye and provide yet they the said Cleborne and company whereof hee this examine was one did stand in great want and miserye and were in greate danger of being destroyed by the Indians the fire haveinge consumed all their municion which they had for their defence and they haveinge nothing lefte but such as the said Cleborne could afterwards provide which was but little and yet at excessive rates. The premisses he knoweth to be true being a sharer in the want and misery aforesaid ut predeposuit. Ac aliter pro parte sua nescit saveinge he believeth the damage which happened by reason of the premisses to the said plantacion could not chuse but bee exceedinge greate, but howe to estimate the same hee knoweth not.

Ad 10^m refert se ad predeposita et aliter pro parte sua nescit saveinge hee saieth that the said Cleborne was at exceedinge greate coste and chardges in settinge thinges in good order uppon the foresaid plantacion and provideinge necessities for the same and payeing of mens wages, and that hee believeth hee was and is yet indebted in Virginia and elsewhere for some of those things which hee provided for that plantacion, but howe much or in what summe or value the chardge which the said Cleborne was at as aforesaid did or doth amounte unto hee knoweth not.

Ad 14^m deponit et dicit that by reason of the premisses the said Cleborne besides the extraordinarye chardge which hee hath bine att in and about the foresaid plantacion hath just arived and suffered much prejudice and hurte in his body in lyeinge uppon the grounde and some tymes uppon boardes, and some tymes in the woodes as hee conceaveth by some cold which hee hath gotten by lyeinge uppon the grounde hee hath loste the use of one of his armes viz. the righte arme. And hee was once taken by the Indians whoe, as hee conceaveth, if hee had not bine presently rescued from them would have kild him, as they have done many others heretofore. And this hee affirmeth uppon his oathe to bee true beinge one of those that helped to rescue him from the Indians and a sharer in misery with the said Cleborne as aforesaid. He aliter nescit.

Ad 17^m deponit et dicit That after the fire happened uppon the foresaid plantacion the said Cleiborne for the reliefe of himselfe and the reste of the company uppon the plantacion did send for some corne which hee had in the country. And hee saith there were fifty heade of cattle belonginge to the said Cleiborne broughtd to the said plantacion, thirty whereof were milch coves, and the milke of a cove for a yeare in that country was then worth one hundred weighte of tobaccoe accountinge each pounce weight of tobaccoe worth 4^d the pounce; and the milk which the said 30 coves did yeeld was spent and used for the maintenance and food of the companyes servants then uppon the said plantacion for the space of five or six yeares together; which hee knoweth to bee true beinge one of those that did helpe to fetch the said cattle, and live uppon that plantacion all the said tyme. Ac aliter nescit. Super relignes articulos non examinatur direccione partis producentis.

Idem ad allegacionem ex parte antedicti Cleiborne in hac causa datam et admissam:

Ad quintam deposit et dicit That whiles hee this deponent was at Virginia hee hath often heard the covenants or a coppie thereof, as the said Cleiborne did affirme it to bee, reade over, which were made between him the said Cleiborne and the articulate Cloberry and companye for the trade and plantacion articulate and the stocke and adventure thereuppon; and hee saieth to his beste remembrance amongste other thinges therein mencioned it was agreed uppon betweene them that the said Cleiborne should trucke away those goodes which were sent over in the shippe the Affrica for corne and send the same in the said shippe to New England and Nova Scotia, and to raise a stocke of hogges uppon the said plantacion and to gett as much beaver and furs as hee could and to give an accounte of his proceedings in the said plantacion for soe much as concerned the joynte stocke and noe otherwise to his beste remembrance alsoe. And that the said Cleiborne was to have a 4th of the proceede or profit of the said trade or plantacion or such other good satisfaction for his paines and care therein as hee should not dislike of. And the said Cleiborne in this examinares judgemente did very well deserve a hundred poundes sterlinge a yeare for his labour and paines spent in and aboute the plantacion aforesaid. And this hee affirmeth uppon his oathe to bee true reddendo rationem ut supra. Ac aliter nescit.

Ad 9^m deponet et dicit That the said Cleiborne uppon his arrivall at the articulate Island findinge moste of the companyes servants sicklye and weeke, some whereof beinge soe sicke and weeke that they were scarce able to dresse their owne victualls, and they beinge but few in number and in respect of such their sicknes & weekenes not able to resiste the Indians in case they had attempted and sett uppon them, as they had lately done uppon a Dutch plantacion not farr distante from thence, and overcome and destroyed them, hee did hire the first yeare 8 or 10 old servants at leaste that had formerly lived in the country, and every yeare afterwards some to come and live uppon that plantacion the better to preserve and keepe the same, and did soe covenante and agree with them that they should not trade with the Indians for anythinge whereby to hinder the companyes trade, but they were onely to serve for wages which the said Cleiborne had agreed with them for. The premisses hee knoweth to be true beinge one of those the said Cleiborne hired as aforesaid.

Ad 10^m deposit et dicit That the firste yeare uppon the said shippes arrivall at the Isle of Kent many of those men which came over in the said shippe dyed, and all or moste of the reste were very sicke and weeke as formerly hee hath declared, in so much that the articulate Cleiborne was forste to hire and did hire others there to worke uppon the foresaid plantacion and to goe upp and downe to and againe as there was occasion to manage the trade there, and to give them wages for their service and paines such as hee could agree with them for. And hee this examine had of him for his paines 4^s a moneth for the space of a yeare, and some had more and some lesse accordinge as they were able to doe service; and none of them more then what he believeth they mighte have had of others; but what each man hadd hee cannot nowe depose. And without the helpe of those men hee saith it had bine impossible for the said Cleiborne to have managed the said trade and plantacion soe well and securely as hee did. And when they goe a tradeinge with the Indians it is moste necessary that they goe at leaste 7 or 8 together for feare they bee sett uppon and taken by the Indians. The premisses he knoweth to bee true haveinge lived there many yeares together and beinge acquainted with the customs and uses there. Ac aliter nescit saveinge hee saith the names of some of those parties who dyed were John Belson Henry Ubancke, but the reste he remembreth not.

EXTRACTS FROM DIARY OF WILLIAM FARIS OF ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND.

JANUARY 4TH, 1792—AUGUST 9TH, 1804.

One of the most picturesque Annapolitans of the eighteenth century was William Faris, silversmith, watch and clock-maker, designer, portrait painter, cabinet maker, tulip grower, tavern keeper, dentist, gossip and diarist. He was born in London, August 16, 1728, and came to Philadelphia as a boy or young man. His appearance in Annapolis was announced in the Maryland Gazette for March 7, 1757. In addition to his sundry notices and advertisements in contemporary newspapers, we have his diary covering the last fifteen years of his life, 1792 to 1804, the accuracy of which, in many instances, may be confirmed through the columns of the Maryland Gazette. "The Will of William Faris," a humorous poem by Charlotte Hesselius, gives a delightful picture of the old silversmith, his family, his friends and his home. It was printed in Scribner's Monthly for January, 1879, and in Riley's The Ancient City.

The diary begins January 4, 1792, and continues to within a week of his death which occurred August 15, 1804. Many births, deaths and marriages in Annapolis are recorded, often with spicy comment. Family occurrences, quarrels with his sons, illnesses, epidemics, tea parties, balls, preachers, horse races, fires, daily notes on wind and weather, the garden and especially the care of his beloved tulips, fill some seven hundred closely written pages that give a picture of Annapolis life obtainable from no other source.

Faris married March 29, 1761, Priscilla Woodward, the daughter of Abraham Woodward and his wife Priscilla Orrick, of Anne Arundel county. Four sons and three daughters reached maturity. The three sons, William, Charles and Hiram were brought up to their father's trade, while the fourth son, Saint John Faris, went to sea. The eldest daughter Ann, married Capt. William Pitt; the second, Abigail, married Capt. Archibald Kerr, while the youngest, Rebecca, died unmarried in her early twenties.

An admirable biographical sketch of Faris may be found in Maryland Silversmiths by J. Hall Pleasants and Howard Sill, p. 257.

And they accounte food there which the cattle eate and live uppon of little or noe value at all, and if it bee not eaten wasteth and consumeth awaye to noethinge. And the said Cleborne had uppon in the said plantacion a greate quantitie of grounde which would have feede cattle, in case hee had cattle sufficiente to have stocked the same, which for wante of cattle did consume and waste awaye to noethinge. And this hee affirmeth uppon his oathe to bee true.

Ad 13^m deponit et dicit That the said Cleiborne did loose a greate quantity of beaver which hee might have gotten, for wante of goodes to trucke with the Indians, which hee dayly almoste expected, from the said Cloberry and company. The premisses hee knoweth to bee true for that hee sawe 5 or 6 hundred poundes weighte of beaver at a time brought to him by the Indians, which hee was forced to lett goe awaye againe, haveinge not wherewith to buy the same of them. And hee had provided boates and men and other things necessarye fitt for trading and wanted onely goodes to trade with; which was a greate hindrance and lose to the company and the said Cleborne. And this hee affirmeth uppon his oath to be true.

Ad 14^m deponit et dicit That from tyme to tyme dureinge the said Cleibornes beinge uppon the foresaid plantacion for 4 or 5 yeares together the people and servants which lived uppon the said plantacion did much complaine of the want of Municion and other necessities which they dayly stode in neede of for their defence againste the Indians; and some of them did murmure thereat and made complainte thereof to the said Cleiborne, thereby the sooner hopeinge to have a redresse, but all in vaine, for that the said Cleiborne haveinge little or noe supplye at all from the company had noethinge but what hee could procure in the country of his owne estate or credit; and that which hee did procure was not much, hee payeinge twoe or three for one for that hee had in respecte of his necessitye more than otherwise hee would have done, and deferringe the provision thereof untill the laste in hopes of supplies from the said Cloberry and company ut predepositum fuit. And this he affirmeth uppon his oath to bee true.

Ad 15^m deponit et dicit That for all or moste of the tyme the said Cleiborne did live uppon the said plantacion hee was very carefull and industreous for the good of the company, and tooke a greate deale of care and paines therein, and yet notwithstanding for want of necessaries and men, 3 of his men at one tyme beinge killed at Maryland the said plantacion did not theire as otherwise it might have done; which hee knoweth to bee true for that hee lived there moste parte of the said tyme.

Ad 16^m deposit et dicit That the said Cleiborne was soe well beloved of the Indians that in case hee had had goodes sufficient to have trucked with them hee would have gott a greate deal more then hee did, and more then any other whatsoever in that country; which hee knoweth to bee true reddendo rationem scientia sua ut supra.

Ad 17^m deponit et dicit. That the trade which men have with the Indians at Virginia is always with daunger of their lives, if they have not a very sufficient guard to defend themselves and they dare not have less then 6 or 7 at leaste together. And it is as muche some tymes as they can well doe to preserve themselves and keepe their goodes which they carry to trucke. And notwithstandinge theire care bee never soe greate yet some tymes they loose goodes, the same beinge stolen away by the Indians, they comeinge downe some tymes at the leaste twoe or three hundred together, and tossinge and tumbleinge theire goodes to viewe and looke on them before they will trucke for them. And in case they will not suffer them soe to doe they will take distaste at them, and perchance goe away and not trucke with them at all. And this hee affirmeth uppon his oath to bee true haveinge bine often tymes employed to carry and recarry goodes which they have traded with the Indians for. Ac aliter nescit.

Super allegatione ex parte Cleyburne data.

Robert Turtle parochie Sancti Egidii Extra Cripplegate, London: carpentarius ubi morane fecit per biennium aut eo circiter, aetatis quasi 54 annorum, testis in hac parte productus, juratus et examinatus, dicit et deponit prout sequitur Viz:

Ad 1^m et reliquas positiones dicte allegacionis usque ad 21^m dicte allegacionis non examinatur ex direccione producentis.

Ad 21^m positionem dicte allegacionis dicit et deponit That he this respondent the yeare and monthe articulate was in boarde the said God fellows pinnace articulate in the harbour of Kecotan, and did then and there see shipped on boarde the said pinnace for the articulate shippe the Sarah and Elizabeth a supply of servantes and goodes to be transported to the Isle of Kent, which said servantes and goodes were consigned to the articulate Evelin by the said Cloberry and Murhead, as appeared by a letter of attorney under their handes and seales, which this deponent sawe and often heard read over Where-uppon this deponent verily believeth that the articulate Evelin did give direccions for landing and houseing of the same servants and goodes in the storehouses uppon the plantacion articulate. But whether the articulate Cleybourne did shew or express any dislike of the premisses or what he saide concerning the same hee this deponent knoweth not, being then at Kecotan aboute 50^{tie} leagues off the Isle of Kent where the servants and goodes articulate were landed as is articulate. Et aliter ad hujusmodi positionem et parte sua nescit deponere ut dicit saveinge that he this deponant (after he came to the Iseland of Kent), did then and there heare and believeth that the articulate Evelin did take away the quantitie of the cloth and number of axes articulate; for that this deponant for want thereof was constrained to sett his hand to a bill for fower barrells of corne till such tyme as the croppe for the plantacion articulate should become ready, which corne might otherwise have bine purchased for the articulate clothe and axes; of which cloth and axes the articulate Evelin did never yet give or make any account that ever this deponant has heard of.

Ad 22^m positionem dicte allegacionis deponit That much about the day of the month & yeare articulate Cleybourne being in preparacion for England did in this deponents presence and hearing and also in the presence and hearing of divers others uppon the plantacion articulate offer unto the said Evelin in all things as in this posicion is deduced uppon and under the condicion articulate; but the articulate Evelin did then and there utterly refuse and deny the said offer uppon the condicion or bond articulate. Whereuppon the articulate Cleybourne openly declared that for his owne parte and as farr as it concerned him hee would not assigne the said plantacion of servants and goodes unto the said Evelin, whoe replied to this deponents remembrance. That he cared not for such assignment, sayeing that he would recover them by lawe or used some words to that effecte. Whereuppon the articulate Cleybourne departed for England. Et ulterius dicit et deponit That the articulate Evelin both whiles the said Cleyborne was in the said plantacion and also dureinge his absence did freely and at his pleasure dispose of and order all the said plantacion and goodes and servants as he thought good, and appointed them their laboures in severall companies, and they followed and obeyed the said Evelins direccions, as is articulate, to this deponents sight and knowledge. Aliter nescit deponere.

Ad 23^m posicionem dicte allegacionis dicit quod pro parte sua rescit deponere.

Ad 24^m posicionem dicte allegacionis dicit quod audit et credit contenta hujus posicionis ssevera. Aliter pro parte sua nescit deponere.

Ad 25^m posicionem dicta allegacionis dicit quod nescit deponere savinge that the articulate Mr John Butler to this deponents knowledge did not oppose or make or meddle with any thing that the articulate Evelin did concerning the state of the said Cloberry & company.

Ad 26^m posicionem dicte allegacionis dicit et deponit That aboute the tyme articulate the said Evelin came unto the plantacion at the Isle of Kent and tooke and received full power command and possession of all the plantacion houses mills goodes servants and other thinges mencioned in the Inventarye articulate without hindrance or interrupcion to this deponents sight and knowledge ut dicit.

And he further saieth that the articulate Evelin did order and direct all the said servants concerning their laboures; and the said servants did obey the articulate Evelin as formerly they had done the said Cleybourne. And that he the said Evelin did appoint divers of the aforementioned servants for the making of pipestaves to worke with the articulate Thomas Sturman and Thomas Keve cowpers viz. Howell Morgan, Thomas White, John Sturman, Roger Baseter and Matthew Royden articulate, whoe made about the number of 50 thousand pipestaves, as this deponent believeth; which said pipestaves this deponent sawe as they lay uppon the ground, but counted them not. And the said pipestaves were so made before the Governour of Maryland tooke possession of them ut dicit.

And he further sayeth that the articulate Evelin did appoint Robert Tourtle Millwright to grinde corne at the mill and to make cogg wheels as is articulate. And also he the said Evelin did then also appoint the articulate William Porter to make pipestaves or to tend the mill in the deponents absence; and that originall Browne articulate was freed by the articulate Evelin; and that Thomas Audley, John Scarbrough, their tymes of service was by the articulate Evelin sold and turned over to the articulate Serjeant Heyward for the quantitie of 600^l of tobaccoe to be paide yearly dureinge their service; and that the said Evelin sold Edward Parry articulate his owne time and likewise sold Vincent Mants time of service to Nicholas Wright for 200^{ls} of tobaccoe. That he likewise sold John Walker for his tyme for 400^{li} of tobaccoe yearly. And he further sayeth that the articulate Mountioy Evelin was by the articulate Evelin placed at Pawtomacke Ryver to learne that country language, and had severall parcellls of trucke with him which was sold. And that the said Evelin received for the same in beaver corne and other commodities to the value of 250^{li} at leaste. Et ulterius dicit et deponit That the articulate Evelin did cause to be transported and carryed to Maryland contrary to his authoritie graunted him by his letter of attorney the articulate John Ayxcough, Edward Deering, Andrew Baker and Thomas his son William Williamson and his wife John Hatch Phillipp West John Dandy and John Hobson, and did there (at Maryland) imploy and set them there at work uppon a plantacion. All which persons the said Evelin had from this deponent. By which plantacion and work done there by them the said Evelin hath gained as this deponent believeth 400^{li} at least. Aliter nescit de ponere.

Ad 27^m posicionem dicta allegacionis dicit et deponit That the articulate Evelin (by vertue of the letter of attorney articulate) to this deponents sighte and knowledge did take into his possession power and disposcion and hath disposed of solde and made away household stuffe truckinge stuffe (and all other goodes mencioned in the Inventory articulate) to the inhabitants freemen of the said Island, and hath transported other parte thereof to Maryland and Virginia and there sold and disposed of kettles tradeinge cloth axes hoes knives gunns beades beavers furs rigging of pinnaces provision for boates bedding pewter lynnens hoggs working tools and other goodes to the value of 200^{li} at least; which this deponent knoweth to be true because he sawe the said Evelin dispose thereof ut dicit. Aliter nescit deponere.

Ad 28^m posicionem dictee allegacion is pro parte sua nescit deponere.

Ad 29^m posicionem dictee allegacionis dicit et deponit That the articulate Evelin to this deponents knowledge did goe 3 or fower tymes to Maryland after the departure of the articulate Cleybourne. Et aliter ad hujusmodi posicionem pro parte sua nescit deponere savinge this deponent heard the Governor of Maryland say that he would not have come so soon to take possession of the articulate Isle of Kent but for the importunitye of the articulate Evelin by fower months.

Ad 30^m posicionem dictee allegacionis dicit et deponit That muche aboute the tyme articulate he this deponent being in the Isle of Kent articulate did then and there see and heare a commission read, wherein and whereby the articulate Evelin was named and made commander of the said Island, which commission was under the seale of the colonye of Maryland. And the said Evelin did by vertue of the said commission summon the Inhabitants of and freemen of the said Island to appeare before him at the fort as is articulate. And then and there the said commission was read (but against the likeing and consent of the freemen of the said Island ut dicit) et ulterius dicit et deponit That at that tyme the articulate Evelin was asked whether he were agent for the articulate Cloberry and company or for the Marylanders whoe answered that he was for both. And that the said Evelin did further declare his minde and uttered some speeches to the effect expressed in the said Article, as this deponent well remembreth.

Ad 32^m posicionem dictee allegacionis pro parte sua nescit deponere.

Ad 33^m posicionem dicta allegacionis dicit et deponit That the articulate Thomas Smith did deliver unto this deponent in the mill articulate 5 barrells of corne conteyninge 25 bushells, but for what it was so brought or trucked this deponent knoweth not ut dicit. Et ulterius dicit et deponit That the articulate Evelin did order this deponent to deliver the said corne and other corne in the said mill (when corne was scarce) to the quantitie of 57 bushells of meale, which this deponent did by the said Evelins direccion and order, and sent it to Maryland; by reason whereof the servants in the Isle of Kent were in great scarcitie and want in case the articulate Thomas Smith and this deponant had not procured supplye thereof. Et aliter nescit deponere.

WEEMS GENEALOGY.

A contribution to the history of the Weems family is furnished in the record from a Bible originally the property of Gustavus Weems (1779-1852), of Marshes Seat, Anne Arundel County, who was a nephew of "Parson" Mason Locke Weems. The Bible was recently presented to the Enoch Pratt Free Library by Harriette Weems, a descendant of the original owner. Published in 1838, by DeSilver of Philadelphia, it contains in Gustavus Weems' careful hand a full pedigree of the family from Scotch David Weems's firstborn in 1725, down to the death of his own lastborn in 1845—three generations.

Marshes Seat (Marshall Seat, Marches Seat) was the plantation of David Weems I, who in 1731, about ten years after his arrival in the colony, settled at this spot on Herring Bay. Here Mason Locke Weems, youngest of 19 children, was born in 1733. The estate passed to his brother, David Weems II, from whom it descended to Gustavus. In fact, Mrs. Emily E. Ford Skeel, in her superb Mason Locke Weems, his works and ways, vol. 2, page 417, cites a letter from Parson Weems to his publishers, Matthew Carey, ordering a shipment of books to be sent to "Mr. Gustavus Weems, care of Francis D. McHenry, Merch^t. County Wharf, Balt^o." This was in 1809. Mrs. Skeel, however, did not identify Gustavus, whose passion for genealogy deserves recognition.

THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE "BALTIMORE AMERICAN."

By THOMAS D. PENNIMAN.

Early in the annals of the city, when Baltimore was little more than a country village, and Annapolis was the commercial centre of the state, a printer, William Goddard, moved from Philadelphia to Baltimore, and on the 20th of August, 1773, published the first issue of a newspaper called the Maryland Journal and Baltimore Advertiser. Prior to this date, it was customary for Baltimoreans to receive a newspaper from, and send advertisements to, either Annapolis or Philadelphia.

After the Revolution, and during the time occupied in the organization of the several States into the United States, Mr. Goddard, becoming interested in post-routes in different parts of the country, resigned the position of editor to his sister.

This paper was apparently a success under the direction of Mr. Goddard and his sister, as in its office, the Declaration of Independence was first officially printed. As far as it is known, Miss Goddard was the first woman to become editor of a newspaper in the United States.

In 1798, its name was changed to the American and Daily Advertiser, and in 1800, direction of the paper was taken over by Alexander Martin, who changed its name to the Baltimore American and Daily Advertiser.

The paper was published under Mr. Martin's signature on June 9th, 1800. The office of the publisher was No. 39 Bond Street, Fells Point.

The size of the early editions of the paper were small, but later in the year the paper was considerably enlarged and otherwise improved, and the office was removed to Second Street near South.

Baltimore at this time was growing rapidly. In 1790 it had 13,508 and in 1800 it had 26,514 inhabitants. The paper was keeping up with the growth of the town.

The Baltimore American was soon to pass into the possession of other people, whose several origins and trainings are as follows:

Europe in the 1700's was not a particularly pleasant place to live, especially in the districts between France and Germany, and in Ireland.

Political disturbances, invasions, wars, etc., made the retaining of one's possessions, or the carrying on of any gainful occupation extremely difficult, if not impossible.

During this period, there were a great many people who emigrated to America, especially from the countries near the Rhine. Among those to arrive in Philadelphia on September 14th, 1754, on the ship Nancy, from Rotterdam, inhabitants from Lorraine, was Jean Christoph Pechin and Christian Boss (the German spelling of the name Bose). Christopher Pechin, of French Huguenot origin, was successful in Philadelphia, and at his death, left particular instructions for the careful training and education of his sons.

His instructions were carried out for in the year 1795, his son, William Pechin, a trained printer, at the age of 22 years arrived in Baltimore, where he immediately went into the printing business, and in 1796 printed the first Baltimore Directory. In 1798, he started the publication of the Baltimore Intelligencer, published tri-weekly, and employed to do the editorial work for this paper, Alexander Martin. Within less than 15 months after the founding of the Intelligencer, Alexander Martin, brought out with the type and on the press of the Maryland Journal, the first issue of the Baltimore American. The printing of which first issue is mentioned above.

Conditions, as previously stated in the 1700's, in Ireland were more than unsettled, and in the great financial and political crisis in Ireland in 1786, the firm of Dobbin and Hardin of Cockhanagh, near Monaghan were, with others ruined.

Archibald Dobbin of the firm, lost everything.

Archibald Dobbin was then 55 years old and had five sons, whose ages ranged from 26 years down to 11 years old.

The eldest son, who was also a member of the firm of Dobbin and Hardin, died one year later, leaving two young daughters.

The second son emigrated to Baltimore.

The third son, Thomas, aged 18 years, was apprenticed to a printer, and his term of printer-apprentice was completed January 1st, 1793.

The fourth son, George, upon Thomas completing his apprenticeship, immediately took his place.

In 1794, Thomas Dobbin, then 22 years old, emigrated to Baltimore, where he made such progress, that in the following year, he, with his partner, under the firm name of Clayton, Dobbin and Company, issued on March 23rd, 1795, the first number of the Baltimore Telegraph from their printing office on the north-west corner of Market (Baltimore) and Frederick Streets.

This paper was afterwards continued by Thomas Dobbin in the rear of No. 1 Light Street, under the name of the Telegraph and Daily Advertiser.

About, or a little before, the time that Thomas Dobbin emigrated from Cockhanagh, there emigrated from Dublin to Baltimore, Francis Murphy, with his two sons, Thomas and John.

Thomas was apprenticed in Baltimore to Thomas Dobbin to learn to be a printer.

In 1797, when Thomas Murphy was 17 years old and an apprentice, both of his parents died of yellow fever.

In the next year, 1798, George Dobbin, at the age of 25 years, who succeeded his brother, Thomas, in Ireland as a printer's apprentice, followed his brother, Thomas, to Baltimore.

These two brothers appear to have been successful, as in 1800 the balance of the Dobbin family arrive in Baltimore from Ireland, including the two orphan nieces, Susan and Margaret Dobbin, 15 and 13 years of age.

In 1803, Alexander Martin, who had been associated with William Pechin, in the publication of the Intelligencer, before he purchased the Baltimore American, sold the paper to Pechin and Frailey.

This firm continued to publish the paper until 1805, when Mr. Frailey sold his interest to Mr. Pechin, who became sole proprietor.

As mentioned above, there arrived in Philadelphia, in 1754, with William Pechin's father, a Bose. Into Baltimore county there moved from Pennsylvania a Jacob Bose, who on dying left a will, similar to the will of William Pechin's father, containing particular instructions as to the education of his children.

In 1805, George Dobbin married Catherine, daughter of Jacob Bose.

In 1808, Thomas Dobbin died, and in 1810, George Dobbin and Thomas Murphy, who had been an apprentice of Thomas Dobbin, published the Baltimore City Directory, under the firm name of G. Dobbin and Murphy.

In 1810 on July 1st, William Pechin, having associated himself with G. Dobbin and Thomas Murphy, the paper, the Baltimore American and Daily Advertiser, on that date bears at its head the names of W. Pechin, G. Dobbin and Murphy.

The ages of the several members of the firm were: 36, 36 and 30 years.

In the following year, 1811, George Dobbin died, leaving three small children, Robert A., George W., and Catherine Dobbin, 4, 2½ and 1 years old, respectively. The name of the firm, however, remained unchanged. The share owned by him was worked for the benefit of his widow, and when his son, Robert A. Dobbin, reached manhood, he took his father's place as a partner.

On September 10th, 1814, announcement was made in the American that for a few days, the publication of the paper would be suspended.

Mr. Murphy, the printer, and Major Pechin the editor, with every attache of the paper were enrolled among the volunteers for the defense of Baltimore, against the British, and they were immediately sent forward.

This was the only time, while the paper was under the control of any member of the firm, the issuing of this paper suspended.

On September 20th, the American resumed publication.

On September 21st, 1814, it gave the people of America their national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner," a most interesting fact in the history of the American.

The partnership of W. Pechin, G. Dobbin and Murphy, continued to publish the paper until 1815, when William Pechin retired from active participation in the management of the American, retaining only the privilege of making what criticism he desired. William Bose, brother of Catherine Bose Dobbin, widow of George Dobbin, was taken into the firm.

The firm name was changed and became Pechin, Dobbin, Murphy and Bose. The name of William Bose, who was not quite 20 years old, first appears at the head of the editorial columns in the issue of July 4th, 1815, which shows that the will of his father had been carried out, and he had been well educated and was a man of great ability.

This firm only existed for two years, for in 1817, William Pechin retired and the firm's name was changed to Dobbin, Murphy and Bose, consisting of Catherine Bose Dobbin, 31 years old; Thomas Murphy, 37 years old; and William Bose, 22 years old.

William Pechin subsequently was associated for a while with General Sheppard C. Leakin, who had married Margaret Dobbin, mentioned above, in the publication of the Chronicle, which was absorbed ultimately by the Baltimore American.

The firm of Dobbin, Murphy and Bose in their publication of the Baltimore American was eminently successful and it was not until 1853, or 36 years later, that it was dissolved. Robert A. Dobbin purchased the interest of Thomas Murphy and Charles C. Fulton purchased the interest of William Bose.

For the next eleven years the Baltimore American was owned and published by Dobbin and Fulton.

In 1862, Robert A. Dobbin died, at the age of 55 years, and was succeeded by his son, Joseph Townsend Dobbin, at the age of 26 years. He, however, died two years later.

The Dobbin interest in the Baltimore American was then sold to Mr. Fulton who became sole owner. Baltimore had increased in size during the period in which the Dobbins had been connected with the Baltimore American, from about 20,000 to about 225,000 inhabitants. From Mr. Fulton, the management of the paper passed to Felix Agnus, who had married a daughter of Mr. Fulton.

Felix Agnus sold the paper to Frank Munsey, and at his death it was sold to William R. Hearst.

Going back to the various people mentioned in this sketch, it is of interest to mention some of their descendants of the members of the firm of Pechin, Dobbin, Murphy and Bose.

William Pechin—among his descendants is William Ingle.

George Dobbin—all descendants of the oldest of his two sons, Robert A. Dobbin, are dead. His second son, George W. Dobbin, has many descendants, the R. A. and T. M. Dobbins, the Nicholas G. Pennimans, and the Robert D. Browns.

Thomas Murphy never married, but from the daughters of his brother, John, to whom he devoted his time and fortune, are descended, Morton McK. Dukehart, and Newton D. Baker, the distinguished ex-Secretary of War.

William Bose, married but had no children, but he is now represented by his namesake and great-nephew by marriage, William Bose Marye.

Of the other Dobbins who came from Ireland to Baltimore, when the family migrated, none left heirs, except Margaret Dobbin, who married Sheppard C. Leakin. From this marriage are descended, Dr. George, his brother William Leonard Souissat, and J. Wilson Leakin, whose bequests to the Peabody Institute, and the Maryland Historical Society, have done and are doing so much for the pleasure and benefit of the people of Baltimore.

In reading this sketch, one cannot help being impressed by the youth of the founders of the Baltimore American and the fact that they must all have been men of great initiative and ability.

The relationship between Christian Boss or Bose, who with Christophe, Pechin, arrived in Philadelphia on September 14th, 1754, on the ship "Nancy," and the Jacob Bose who moved from Pennsylvania, had not as yet been established.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

In the American Law Review, vol. 66, p. 487 (September, 1932), there appeared an article by Monroe Johnson, Esq., entitled: "Roger B. Taney: a Reappraisal."

This article is of such interest and importance that its republication in our pages was given careful consideration, but space limitation rendered this inadvisable. To those interested in the life and career of this great jurist, we cordially recommend its perusal, as it deserves a much wider circulation than is afforded by the pages of a law review.

THOMSON. The two Thomsons, who married two of the daughters of Col. Joseph Chapline, were sons of Rev. Samuel Thomson, one of the early Presbyterian ministers in the Cumberland Valley in Pennsylvania, by his second wife. They were half brothers of Rev. William Thomson, D.D. of the Church of England, who died, after the Revolution, while in charge of a Parish in Cecil County, Md. The family name is sometimes written with a "p" and sometimes without. Rev. Samuel Thomson, whose name on his tombstone has the "p", signed his name to his will, Thomson, and the Rev. William, his son wrote the name without the "p". General William Thompson of Carlisle, Pa. and Dr. Robert Thompson of Lancaster, Pa., nephews of Rev. Samuel, both used the "p". However, as the family was originally Scotch, I think the Thomson without the "p" is probably correct.

MARYLAND

VOL. XXVIII.

DECEMBER, 1933.

No. 4.

THE ENGLISH BEGINNINGS OF MARYLAND.

MRS. ARTHUR BARNEVELD BIBBINS.

Three centuries have passed since the two sailing ships, the Ark and the Dove, freighted with the destinies of Maryland, left Cowes, on the Isle of Wight, England, Nov. 22, 1633.

After a tedious voyage of four months, hugging the coast of Africa for safety, and then across to the friendly West Indies, they sailed proudly through the Capes, and up the broad waters of the Chesapeake which had so delighted Sir George Calvert five years before, and anchored safe from the Indians on St. Clement's (now Blackiston's) Island, in the Potomac. A few days later, March 27, 1634, with boom of cannon, and colors flying the company went ashore on the mainland. At what is now St. Mary's City, they purchased the village-site of the Yaocomicos and began the actual settlement of Maryland.

Does the story of Maryland begin with the coming ashore of these colonists? By no means.

Maryland's history is part of a much larger whole. It is not solely a native American growth. It grew not up out of the soil of Maryland alone, but was, first of all, the result of generations of English enterprise and civilization, projected into the crude, new conditions of the American wilderness.

Sir George Calvert was a leading Englishman first, and later the Founder of Maryland. He was part of the pulsating era of Queen Elizabeth and James I, a chief actor of the time of Raleigh and Cecil, of Shakespeare and Bacon, a period which was the inception of England's greatness as a nation.

The beginnings of Maryland more than of any other colony were a direct reflection of English vicissitudes of Court, Church and State. This was because Sir George Calvert was Secretary of State to James I. at the strategic time when England was at the parting of the ways between feudalism and liberalism, between royal autocracy and democratic privilege.

Maryland's proprietary rights were a counterpart of the princely prerogatives of the Bishop of the palatinate of Durham, near neighbor to George Calvert's home in Yorkshire. Toby Matthews, the Bishop's son, was one of his school-mates, and whose home, the towering castle on the precipice above the River Weare, was the boy's first vision of pomp and power.

Maryland's constitutional privileges were a reflection of the Stuart idea of the legitimate functions of sovereign and subject, the former to initiate, the latter to consent to laws so proposed.

Sir George Calvert, friend and loyal supporter of monarchy, sought to preserve intact in his charter the rights of sovereignty.

His son, Cecil Calvert, who lived through the compelling lessons of the Declaration of Rights, the Civil War, and the execution of Charles I., conceded by grant or judicious compromise, a broad-minded liberty, civil and religious, which made Maryland unique among colonial people who sought freedom in America from political and ecclesiastical strife.

Maryland inherited the Stuart idea of government, but its administration in hands far wiser than the Stuarts, preserved for its proprietors their Province when the Stuart King Charles I. lost both his throne and his head. Whence came the forces that shaped the lives of its founders, and thus brought into existence their colony in the New World?

The age of Elizabeth and James I. had recently emerged out of feudalism. The invention of gunpowder had taught its leveling message.

Fortressed castles like "Old Wardour", where Cecil Calvert sought his bride, Lady Anne Arundell, were soon to find they could no longer stand the onslaught of the new warfare. The knight of chivalry, of sword and buckler was gone. His place was taken by men of affairs, interested in adventure, in colonization, or in state-craft as advisers to the crown, as was Sir Robert Cecil, friend of George Calvert, who was to succeed him as Secretary of State.

The destruction of the old strongholds foretold the downfall of their owners as a privileged class. The Civil War hastened the end of the rule of the privileged few. It pulled down the barriers between sovereign and subject, between class and class, and opened an entrance to democratic right and privilege. Men insisted on redress of grievances before funds were granted for royal schemes.

While the old lines of cleavage were being wiped out, new and sharp barriers were being set up in religious practice and belief.

The Reformation under Henry VIII. who had thrown off the Papal yoke, left England in the throes of a mighty struggle between the adherents of the new faith and the growing opposition to Rome. Both felt it obligatory to root out heresy. Many refused to observe Protestant forms and usages—of these the “recusants” of Yorkshire were a conspicuous example, and George Calvert’s maternal kinsfolk, the Croslands and Hawsworths, prominent families of Yorkshire, were among the faithful.

When Elizabeth succeeded her stern sister Queen Mary, she rejoiced her people by the espousal of Protestantism, and became the uncompromising foe of Mary’s husband, Philip of Spain. He determined to reconquer England for the Pope, and place Mary, Queen of Scots, on the throne. Elizabeth lived in an atmosphere of threat and conspiracy which shadowed young and old alike.

TWO GREAT EVENTS IN YOUNG CALVERT’S LIFE.

As a pale-faced lad of six, George Calvert, son of Leonard Calvert and Alice Crosland daughter of John Crosland of Croslands, sat with bated breath in the quaint old manor house at Kiplin, Yorkshire, while his mother told of the fatal day in 1586 when Mary, the rash but resolute, laid her auburn head upon the block at Fotheringay Castle, herself the victim of Babington's Conspiracy to have her supplant Elizabeth, a plot which for a time threatened though falsely to involve his own grandfather, John Crosland of Croslands.

Scarce was this grim tragedy submerged when in 1588 Mary's avenger Philip of Spain bore down on England with the 140 unwieldy "galleons" of the Spanish Armada, "fit for a pageant, but not for a fight", and united all England behind their Queen. Spain was nearly bankrupt when her fleet set on fire by the swift English boats drifted to destruction, and the rest were wrecked on the coast of Scotland. England succeeded her as the world's leader in religious and maritime affairs.

Now George Calvert the boy of eight thrilled anew as he heard of the Spanish hulks wrecked on the Yorkshire coast, and yearned to outstrip Sir Francis Drake in his service to England.

GEORGE CALVERT'S ANCESTRY.

The Calverts had come to Yorkshire from Flanders, of an "auncient familie and estate", which to-day numbers a thousand acres around Kiplin on the left bank of the Swale. They previously had a seat at Danby Wiske, and Lazenby Hall, Yorkshire. Leonard Calvert's lands already yielded such fine returns from the wool-raising industry which the thrifty Flemings had introduced into England that his son George was soon to be sent down to Trinity College, Oxford, where Sir Walter Raleigh's exploits in America were on every tongue.

To reach Kiplin to-day, one must leave the main road from York to Durham, and journey westward by rail to Scorton Station.

A short drive will bring us to Scorton itself, a quaint old-world village, clustered round the village green, the chief ornaments of which are the vine-clad vicarage, the "Shoulder of Mutton Inn", and the Library erected by the lord of the Manor.

KIPLIN HALL, BOLTON-ON-SWALE, YORKSHIRE, ENGLAND.
Manor house built by Inigo Jones for Sir George Calvert in 1622, when he was Secretary of State to King James I.

Two miles farther and we reach the Manor of Kiplin where George Calvert was born in 1580, no doubt in the old manor-house which preceded the present one.

Our discovery on investigation that the existing manor-house was the actual house built by Calvert in 1622, at the height of his official life was a great satisfaction to us, as all authorities we had read had simply stated that "he was born at Kiplin," easily confused with the hamlet of Kiplin, with no allusion to the family as landed proprietors, or to this stately house as his home when he planned the province of Maryland.¹

In the York Registry 1534-1556 we discovered numerous wills spelt variously, Calvard, Calverte and Calvert, all of "Oulcotes, parish Arneclif." The earliest was of William Calvert, Feb. 9, 1542, while that of most interest was of John Calvert of Oulcotes, May 9, 1566, who mentions his sons "Leonard, John and William", very probably George Calvert's grandfather, whose name was John.

CALVERT'S MOTHER ADHERES TO THE OLD FAITH.

While comparatively little is known of Leonard Calvert's ancestry or religious connections, much of new interest became available in this region regarding his mother's background, and loyalty to the old faith indicating the home influences which eventually brought her son back to the church of his early training.

The Croslands were people of importance among Yorkshire gentry. They bore a coat of arms of which the chief emblem—the cross, indicating their Crusade lineage—is conspicuous in the Maryland seal and flag, a blend of the Calvert and Crosland arms.

The mother of Alice or Alicia Crosland of Croslands near Almondbury was a daughter of ——— Hawksworth of Hawksworth, head of another prominent Yorkshire family, some of whom were of the proscribed faith.

These shaping influences which early surrounded young Calvert became apparent as soon as we stopped beyond Scorton at the ancient church of St. Mary's, Bolton-on-Swale, in the village of Kiplin. Although the Calverts were lords of the manor for more than a century, "there are no family records in the old register", because as the vicar Rev. Dacre Malinder explained "the family was of the Catholic faith".

It is interesting to note of this ancient church that Bulmer's History of North Yorkshire states it was in 1604 that George Calvert's mother who "was devotedly attached to the old faith, refused to comply with the law, and receive the sacrament at Easter in the church at Bolton."

In the list of "Recusants and Non-Communicants in Yorkshire in 1604," in Peacock's "Yorkshire Catholics", p. 69, (transcribed from the Rawlinson MSS. in the Bodleian Library, Oxford), is this entry—"Bolton parishe: ——— wife of Leonard Calvert of Kipling, non-communicant at Easter last".

As the fine for absence from communion in the parish church in those critical times was sometimes twenty pounds, the test of fidelity was a severe one. One does not wonder that with this evidence of his mother's liability to penalty and persecution, George Calvert became an advocate of tolerance and religious freedom, and was resolved to provide a refuge and haven for his friends in the new world.

As his parents with much foresight had sent him at the early age of 14 to Oxford University, he arrived at the flood-tide of colonial enterprise which was to center his reflecting mind later on in a solution of some of England's problems in scenes far aloof from European penalties and handicaps.

His rapid advancement is chronicled by Anthony Wood in the quaint lines in "Athenae Oxonienses", which record his noteworthy progress.

CALVERT'S RECORD AT OXFORD.

"George Calvert, son of Leonard Calvert by Alice his wife, Daugh. of John Crosland of Crosland, was born 1580 at Kiplin in the Chappelry of Bolton in Yorksh. (at which place he bestowed much Money in building in the latter end of the Reign of K. James I.)

He became a Commoner at Trinity College in Lent Term, 1593-4, and in the year of his age 15, took one degree in Arts in 1597, and then travelled beyond the Sea. On his return he was made Secretary to Sir Rob. Cecill one of the prime Secretaries of State, being then esteemed a forward and knowing person in matters relating to the State. When Sir Robert was advanced to higher offices, he retained him for several years for his prudence and faithfulness in many weighty Matters."

And then he adds in admiration at his rapid promotion.

"In 1606 he was actually created Mayster of Arts when James I. was entertained by the University."

On this extraordinary occasion of much magnificence, James entered Oxford on horseback surrounded by an imposing cavalcade of nobles and courtiers and was received like Elizabeth with costly banquets and pompous disputations which delighted his pedantic self-complacency.

The Duke of Lennox, the Earl of Oxford and Northumberland and Sir Robert Cecil also received the Master's degree as well as Calvert, then an untitled commoner. He was at this time twenty-five years of age and recently married (Nov. 22, 1604, to Anne Mynne, dau. of George Mynne, of an ancient family of Bexley, Kent, his son Cecil who was named for his patron being born about March 1, 1606).

Anthony Wood continues his chronicle:

"Afterwards, By the endeavors of Sir Robert Cecill, he was made one of the Clerks of the Council and in 1617 received the honour of Knighthood from his Majesty at Hampton Court. In 1618² he was made Secretary of State to his Majesty, who as before had used his help in many matters of moment, so did he oftener afterwards to his great benefit and advantage. In 1620 the King gave him a yearly pension of a thousand pounds from the Customs, and on the 16th of Feb. 1624 he was by the name of Sir George Calvert of Danby Wiske, Yorkshire, Knight, created Baron of Baltimore, of the County of Longford in Ireland, being then a Roman Catholic, or at least very much addicted to their religion.

As for his adventuring into America as absolute Lord of Avalon in the New-found-land, and taking possession of a peninsula between the Ocean on the East, and the Bay of Chesapeake on the West, afterwards called by him Maryland, let the histories of Travelers tell you."

CALVERT'S EARLY INTEREST IN COLONIZATION.

No doubt Calvert's first interest in colonization was deeply stirred at Oxford. Sir Walter Raleigh one of the most brilliant men in the world's annals had left Oriel College to confer upon his discovery in the New World the name "Virginia" in honor of his royal patroness, the virgin Queen Elizabeth. The disappearance of his first colonists in the woods of America had thrilled England into repeated efforts to trace their end. Raleigh's friend, Richard Hakluyt of Oxford, the great historian of English discovery, had stirred tremendous interest by his great folios "Hakluyt's Voyages".

It was Calvert's Oxford training with his intimate knowledge of the successes and failures of the first colonial attempts, which enabled him and his son to make of Maryland the "first American Colony which was a success from the beginning". He became a member of the Virginia Company in 1609, and later one of the councillors for New England.

No surer road to fortune could befall him than to enter Cecil's service at the height of his power as James's trusted administrator of the nation's destinies. England's policy was now in safe hands. Cecil knew how to avoid entangling alliances with foreign powers, and to steer at home the resolute forces checked by Elizabeth's Tudor diplomacy, but now ready to vent themselves upon the slobbering son of Mary, Queen of Scots.

Her thrift had barely made ends meet in this era when the influx of Spanish gold from the New World had materially raised prices. When James made pedantic efforts to enforce what he called his "divine right" to privileges the Commons deemed their own, a clash of interests was bound to ensue.

James who wore his doublet quilted from fear, and averted his head from the sword when he dubbed a knight, amused his new subjects.

His pretended learning led Henry IV. of France to term him "the wisest fool in Christendom". He could not apply his theories to existing facts.

James had a pet theory as to the "Divine Right of Kings", the monarch's freedom from control by law, or by anything but his own royal will.

He founded his blunder on the old Tudor idea of "absolute monarchy", or freedom from Papal interference. But James declared the King was above law by his absolute power. "If it is blasphemy to dispute what God can do, it is high contempt for a subject to dispute what a King can do," was his dictum.

The Stuart kings were in a measure victims of circumstance. They inherited mistaken notions of Tudor tyranny and autocracy which in their time and grasp were impossible to enforce.

England as a nation had awakened. The Reformation, the Renaissance had developed a new Englishman, patriot to the core, but aroused to a keen sense of his own powers and rights as an individual. The old order had passed. England knew now the vast difference between royal prerogative and democratic right.

James would not learn the lesson of the times. He asked for money. The Commons presented "grievances", and insisted on new privileges.

Parliament offered "the Great Contract" a revenue of £200,000 yearly to the King, if he would surrender certain oppressive feudal rights, but they would denounce the royal "impositions." The King said the revenue was too little and dissolved them a second time in disgust.

George Calvert was a member of this Parliament. For seven long years James raised money by forced loans, or the shameless sale of peerages. Unfortunately, the great Secretary, Cecil, had died, and Calvert had succeeded him without his astute experience.

THE SPANISH MATCH LEADS TO CALVERT'S UNDOING.

James now proceeded to undo all that the struggle of Elizabeth and the wreck of the Armada had done for England. He turned to his fixed dream for years—the marrying of Prince Charles to the Spanish Infanta, whose vast dowry of two million crowns revealed the extent of Spanish spoils from the New World. “If I cannot get money from Parliament, I will get it from the King of Spain” he gloated, in order to scourge the people by turning their weapon upon themselves, but he found it later a two-edged sword.

He became his own Prime Minister, gave control to such wily adventurers as the Duke of Buckingham, whose nod made the highest noble quail.

Spain dangled the bait—the marriage, before the reckless eyes of the King. His allies implored against it. Parliament protested. “Its duty was to give money, not advice to the royal family”, they were told. Others backed a plan they hoped might entangle him in a war with Spain.

Raleigh was released from the Tower (kept there on a false charge), and sent to Guiana to discover a gold mine. Faithless James let him depart, but warned Spain, who drove him back to his ship as he landed. He tried to seize the Spanish treasure ships but failed. He returned, broken-hearted. His death on the scaffold appeased Spain, but deprived England of the “greatest Englishman of them all who first saw her triumph at sea and in America”.

Raleigh's maps, and papers in the Tower were delivered to Sir George Calvert, which keenly increased his aroused interest in the New World.

James despite popular displeasure at Raleigh's death, pursued his scheme. The Commons impeached Sir Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam, Lord High Chancellor, and friend of Calvert,³ for bribery, and then demanded war with Spain, and a Protestant marriage for Prince Charles. James in a frenzy at their daring cried "Bring stools for the Ambassadors", and threatened them with the Tower.

THE KING'S REPRESENTATIVE IN PARLIAMENT.

The King then sent a letter to the Commons by Sir George Calvert, his official spokesman. Its burning words must have seared like a hot iron.

This ominous letter which we found after much search in the archives of the British Museum reveals the perilous part Calvert was forced to enact, as the agent of the King at this critical time.

"His Maties Ire to Sir George Calvert, the same by him to the Commons House of Parliament, as making cleare his Maties meaning touching some poynts in his aforesaid answer concerning the liberties & privileges of that house, and the titles and rights that House hath to them.

Right Trustie & well beloved Counsellor, We greet you well.

We are sorry to learn that notwithstanding our reiterated messages to our House of Commons for going on in their businesses in regard of the shortnesse of tyme betwixt this & Christmas, & of their earnest desyre that we should now conclude a session by making of good and profitable Lawes, yet they continue to loose tyme. . . . Whereas we told them in our said answer that we could not allow of the Style calling it their auncient & undoubted right & inheritance, but that they shld say their privileges were derived from the grace and permission of our ancestors and Us. For the most of them grew from precedents, which shows rather a toleration than Inheritance.

The playne truth is that We cannot with patience endure our subjects to use such antimonarchiall words to us concerning their liberties except they had subjoynd that they were granted unto them by the grace and favor of our predecessors. . . .

Let them go on cheerfully . . . rejecting wrangling upon words

Royston, 16 Dec. 1621

To our right Trusty & well beloved Counsellor Sr. G. Calvert, Knt, one of our principal Secretaries."

Calvert found it a thankless task indeed, to stem the rising tide of indignation at the King's resistance. He could not foresee the constitutional monarchy of the future, controlled by a Parliament representing the will of the people. The assaults on royal prerogative must have betokened to him a carnival of misrule and revolution such as France endured a century later. Calvert's chief antagonist in the Commons and the Virginia Company was Sir Edwin Sandys whose advanced ideas were a perpetual terror to the King. Calvert was ordered to keep him in restraint, and to explain as best he could the absence of this great parliamentary leader.

James hated Sir Edwin so bitterly that he sent the Virginia Company about to elect a governor, the well known message "Choose the devil, if you will, but not Sir Edwin Sandys"! Sandys was chosen for deputy governor, and soon after imprisoned. Parliament deemed this "a crying grievance". Its temper was heard in the answer it returned to Calvert's letter.

It resolved "That the liberties, franchises, and jurisdiction of Parliament are the ancient and undoubted birthright and inheritance of the subjects of England, and that the defence of the Realm & redress of grievances are proper subjects of debate in Parliament . . . and that every member of the House ought to have freedom of speech to treat the same. . . .

The king met this protest with a "characteristic outrage." He sent for the Journals of the House, and tore out the obnoxious pages with his own hands, crying passionately "I will govern according to the common weal, but not according to the common will",—and thereupon, he dissolved Parliament, once more. But the victory of the Commons was complete.

PARLIAMENT SUPREME—THE KING DEFEATED.

Every power it claimed it had secured, free speech, the right of taxation, of impeachment, against monopolies, all came into its keeping. Parliament and not the King had become the sovereign power. James, blind to the inevitable, still clung to his Spanish dream. "Baby Charles" as James called him became precipitate. At Buckingham's instigation the impetuous pair set off for Madrid in disguise, thinking their presence would secure the promised bride. They threw the Spanish Court, and the Infanta alike into consternation. On the way they stopped in Paris where Charles saw the young Princess Henrietta Maria, daughter of Henry IV, his future Queen, after whom Maryland was later named by Charles "Terra Mariæ", Land of Mary. As she was but a child of 13 then, he paid little attention to her.

Secretary Calvert writes the King March 31, 1623 that he "has just received a packet from Spain, detailing the reception of the Prince", and asks "if bonfires shall now be ordered". James replies he is to "thank the King of Spain for the honourable entertainment given the Prince. Bonfires are to be made in London".

Spain played fast and loose with the Prince. It demanded a Catholic education for the Prince's children, and that the English laws against Catholics be relaxed. Even then they withheld the bride, they did not trust Charles's promises.

CALVERT RESIGNS, RETURNS TO KIPLIN.

The Prince enraged at his failure hastened back to England eager to vent his wrath upon Spain. A great burst of national joy greeted him. Charles forced James to summons Parliament, and urged supplies for a rupture with Spain. The laws against Catholics were renewed with vigor.

During James's intrigues with Spain, many courtiers had declared their adherence to the old faith, among them Secretary Calvert, whose mother was a Catholic.

He had staked his hopes for England upon the King's plans, but he now scrupled to break a treaty oath and plunge his country into war to gratify the wounded vanity of Charles and the Duke. To humiliate him the Duke had business diverted from his office. Sick at heart at a King's service where faithfulness was rewarded by the unworthy caprice of a degraded favorite, he disposed of his office to Sir Albert Morton for £6000 and resigned Feb. 1625. Though the King professed a particular affection for him because of his great abilities and integrity and created him Lord Baltimore of Baltimore in Ireland, he wished to retire to the stately home designed by Inigo Jones he had recently built in Yorkshire, and prepare for his new world adventure.

With Sir Toby Matthews, his boyhood friend, now a Catholic though son of the Bishop of Durham, he left London, faithful and unscathed in a period which had tried men's souls. It had victimized Raleigh, impeached Bacon, and was soon to execute Strafford, Calvert had followed his convictions at the cost of place and power. It is the high standard of a loyal courtier by which he should be judged.

Now for respite he refreshed his soul in the beautiful environs of Kiplin, his grief stirred anew by the recent loss of Lady Anne who had planned with him this stately home for their posterity, and then been called away from their hopeful brood of ten children by the birth of the youngest son, John. Their names and the family record of five sons and five daughters are given in imposing style in the "emblazoned pedigree" beside the choice marble altar-figure which represents their mother on her tomb in the church at Hertingfordbury, Herts. It was soon after the death of his wife, who was of the English church, that he returned to the faith of his mother.

KIPLIN, A CONTRIBUTION TO ARCHITECTURAL PROGRESS.

Kiplin, as it was erected in 1622 was a very notable contribution to the changing domestic architecture of the period. Designed by the Surveyor of Public Works to James I for his chief Secretary of State, Sir George Calvert, the architect (the reviver of classical architecture), Sir Inigo Jones has emphasized its transition from the era of the mediaeval fortress to more modern needs by changing its grim towers once used for lookout posts and battlements into great four-square chimneys which at once suggest the new comfort and luxury of the Stuart period. This was later enhanced by the addition of a library wing by a recent owner, the late Admiral Walter Cecil Carpenter.

The time-mellowed seventeenth century bricks bespeak the recent change from stone to brick, while the mullioned windows tell of the new use of glass instead of wicker and lattice. The walls were hung with tapestries and arras work.

Outside the ancient yellow yew-hedge, the lime, linden, oak and thorne trees, the stone-pillared gateway and the antique wall testify no less to its great age, as well as to its remarkable preservation as birthplace of three-century old Maryland. No other State probably possesses such a unique connecting-link with its own historic past.

On the walls to-day are portraits of the Talbots ⁴ who intermarried with the Calverts, one of the Earl of Tyrconnell, and one of King Charles II, who it is said was grand-father to Lady Charlotte Lee, wife of Benedict Leonard Calvert, 4th Lord Baltimore.

Kiplin remained in the immediate family of the Calverts until 1713 when it was purchased by Christopher Crowe, who later married Lady Charlotte, widow of the 4th Lord Baltimore. His great-great-grand-daughter, Sarah, who inherited the estate, married John Delaval Carpenter, the 4th Earl of Tyrconnell, and upon his death without heirs, the property was bequeathed to the Earl's cousin, the Hon. Walter Cecil Talbot, Second son of the Earl of Shrewsbury, who in 1868, assumed the name and arms of Carpenter and was known as Admiral, the Hon. Walter Cecil Carpenter so that the estate for two centuries owned by the Calverts has since been owned by those intimately connected with the same background.

It was after several years stay amid the choice environment of Kiplin, during which he married again that Calvert turned his mind to visit his colony at Avalon in Newfoundland in 1627, as he wrote the Earl of Wentworth: "I must either go and settle it in order, or . . . lose all the charges for these six years by-past".

He built an imposing mansion, equipped it finely, at an outlay of £30,000 then found the rigors of the climate "had made his house a hospital, of 100 persons 50 sick at a time and nine or ten of them dyed", so he writes King Charles pathetically, Aug. 19, 1629:

"Not knowing better how to employ the poore remainder of my days," he adds "I will remove with forty persons to Virginia, if your Majesty will grant me a precinct of land with such privileges as the king, your father, my gracious master, was pleased to grant me here I shall endeavor to deserve it, and pray for your Majesty's long and happy reign".

What were these privileges, and whence had they come, which Lord Baltimore wished to transfer from his charter of Avalon to Maryland?

They were the princely powers of the Palatinate of Durham, which adjoined Calvert's Yorkshire home upon the north, and were intimately known by him for their value and extent.

DURHAM'S PRINCELY POWERS CONFERRED ON CALVERT.

William the Conqueror built Durham Castle in 1072,

Half Church of God,
Half fortress 'gainst the Scot, to guard the Cathedral and monastery, and gave the Bishop of Durham powers almost equal to those of the King, to protect England from the ravages of the warlike Scots on its northern border.

These special powers were both civil and military. Because of the Bishop's remoteness from the courts at London, he could erect courts, punish criminals, and furnish speedy justice, and

'Half Church of God,
Half fortress 'gainst the Scot.'

The remarkable powers of the Bishop of Durham were incorporated by

in case of invasion, he could summon forces, make war and repel attack. Lord Baltimore desired just such powers for his wilderness kingdom of Maryland, and moreover, he added in his Maryland charter "as great as had been enjoyed by any Bishop of Durham", and so obtained for himself powers "greater than any ever conferred on a subject by any sovereign of England".

He was given permission but not compelled to have churches consecrated according to the laws of England.

He had power to enact laws with the assent of the freemen of the province. Thus the enacting power was not with the Assembly but with the Proprietary—a relic of Stuart autocracy, but the people soon claimed the right to propose or originate legislation, and after a threatened deadlock, his successor, Cecil, wisely surrendered his charter right to initiate laws.

Calvert's court experience had taught him to protect his colonists from royal exactions such as Virginia had suffered. The power of the Crown to impose any customs or taxation was distinctly renounced. The colonists were to have all the rights and liberties of Englishmen, and Lord Baltimore the most favorable construction possible as to the interpretation of his charter. King Charles may have deemed special favor was due Calvert for the disappointment and retribution he had caused him over the Spanish match.

At all events all these charter rights were bestowed on this determined colony-planter on condition that he render the King at Windsor Castle the insignificant tribute of two Indian arrows annually, in token of fealty, and one-fifth of the native gold and silver found in Maryland, which never materialized. He, moreover, held Maryland by free and common socage instead of by knights' service as with Avalon.

Sir George Calvert "probably drafted with his own hand—the hand of an experienced and accomplished man of the court", the charter of Maryland, as he had previously done that of Avalon.

"The ambiguous passages in the Maryland charter which have been accounted evidence of design to make way for toleration or even possible dominance of Catholicism had appeared already in the charter of Avalon. Was it intended to supply a refuge for Englishmen of Catholic faith? The question is not easily answered." The great cost of the enterprise, £30,000, suggests that others must have been associated with him.

If the Maryland Charter has appeared to some "a masterpiece of dexterous ambiguity", it must be conceded Calvert had to secure what he could in the only way the laws of England then permitted.

The times were exigent. If the colony were intended to be a refuge for such recusants as his mother, other kinsfolk, and leading Catholics, toleration and protection were the best he could obtain for his co-religionists, and this only by granting the same to Protestants.

In the meantime an even greater crisis to English civil liberties had arisen.

When Charles I. succeeded his father, the struggle between the King and Parliament waxed more intense than ever. Charles' obstinate defiance of Parliament from 1625 to 1629 threatened the suspension of all Parliamentary institutions in England. The bitter religious bigotry of Archbishop Laud persecuted Puritan and Roman Catholic alike, and the only refuge of tormented Englishmen seemed in flight.

While the Puritans sought refuge in New England, the even more cruel laws against Catholics caused them to make renewed effort for a sanctuary of safety.

In 1628 the epoch-making Petition of Right was passed affirming the claims of the Great Charter, and the determination of all Englishmen, Protestant and Catholic alike, to stand for the preservation of English liberties.

Since the rigors of the climate of Newfoundland had obliged Calvert in the fall of 1629 to sail with his colony to Virginia where his foes, the friends of Sir Edwin Sandys, forced upon him the oath of supremacy (to acknowledge the king as the rightful head of the Church in England), he protested this indignity, and explored with eager eye the goodly shores and teeming waters of the Chesapeake.

Leaving his wife, Lady Joan, and children at Jamestown, he went back to England, ill, discouraged, and "much decayed in strength", but still consumed with the purpose of establishing a colony which should prove a heritage for his family and a refuge for persecuted Englishmen, especially Catholics. Now began a concerted effort to provide with the aid of prominent English Catholics a place of security.

On Feb. 10, 1630, Sir George Calvert with Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundell, applied to the Attorney General for land south of the James. Because of his opposition to the King's exactions, Arundell was committed to the Tower, and died in November, 1630.

Calvert was now assisted by Father Richard Blount, Provincial of the English Province, Society of Jesus, who sent Fathers White and Altham with Calvert to further the settlement secured north of the Potomac.

Calvert obtained the grant of Maryland in his name alone by a charter very similar to Avalon, but died exhausted by his labors and was buried April 15, 1632, in St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, Fleet St., London, in grounds adjoining the Royal Courts of Justice, a spot which should be marked and visited by Marylanders. The Charter passed the Great Seal, June 20, 1632, and was entrusted with all its hopes and possibilities to his son, Cecil.

In order to meet any opposition to the transporting of Catholics to Maryland, a paper was prepared by Blount in 1632 for the guidance of Lord Baltimore entitled "Objections answered touching Maryland". This shows that many recusants were expected to go hither.

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED TOUCHING MARYLAND.

According to Blount's judgment, it might be objected—

I. That the Laws against Roman Catholics were made to secure their conformity to the Protestant Religion,—but license to go to Maryland, where they may have free liberty of their religion would take away all hopes of their conformity to the Church of England. To this it should be answered "Reasons of State caused most of these laws, against plotting mischief to King or State, and to secure their allegiance by oath and penalty puts them out of the way of conformity to the Church of England."

II. Such a license will seem a kind of toleration of Popery. To be answered "This Parliament has given passes to Catholics to go to France. Why not to Maryland?"

III. The King's revenues will be impaired by losing benefit of Recusants estates. To be answered "That Law was not made for the King's profit, but to free the Kingdom of Recusants, so going to Maryland would relieve the Kingdom of them."

IV. Going to Maryland would draw away people and wealth from England. Answer—"The number of Recusants in England is not so great that the departure of them all from hence would little prejudice the Kingdom in decrease of people or wealth."

This important document of Father Blount's of 1632 shows that the Charter of Maryland was from the start believed to assure liberty of conscience to Roman Catholics, and that, of course, toleration for Catholics carried with it, of necessity, toleration for all Christians. This was to be one of the "fundamental instructions".

Hence Cecil Calvert organized his first expedition so that it was composed of neither faith exclusively. To have done otherwise would have wrecked it. When the ships were halted at Gravesend after sailing from London, Oct. 18, 1633, Edward Watkins, Searcher, administered the oath of supremacy to 128, who were certainly largely Protestants, so that about 128 out of 220 were Protestants. They took on the rest with Fathers White and Altham at the Isle of Wight, whence they sailed from Cowes, Nov. 22, 1633. No Protestant minister went along nor was there any provision for that service. However,

Baltimore gave the most rigorous orders that acts of Catholic religion on shipboard be performed with as much privacy as possible "whereby any just complaint may not hereafter be made by them (the Protestants) in Virginia, or in England". "The founders of Maryland were men of affairs shaping plan to opportunity, and the situation was inexorable."

MARYLAND TOLERATION—A PRACTICAL POLICY, NOT AN ADVANCED THEORY.

"There is no pretence of toleration as a theory of Government here", a discerning authority says. "That would have been far in advance of Raleigh, or Bacon, or even contemporary Puritan leaders." (Eggleston, Beginners of a Nation.)

Under the charter only freemen enjoyed political rights. The Catholics had the majority of freemen, hence the first colony was numerically Protestant, but politically, religiously and socially Roman Catholic.

It is curious to note that among the names in "Babington's Conspiracy" that Tyrrell the Jesuit had earlier implicated with John Crosland of Crosland, and then exonerated, as those "I most falsely and unjustly accused" were those of the "Earl and Countess of Arundel, Lord Win—, (Wintour?), Sir Thomas Gerard", and others.⁵

Now we note the interesting co-incidence, that in Cecil Calvert's "List of the 'Gentlemen Adventurers to Maryland, who have gone thither in person' on the first voyage, 1633, were the names of Edward and Frederick Wintour, sons of Lady Anne Wintour, and Richard Gerard, son to Sir Thomas Gerard, Knight & Baronet."⁶

In the midst of false accusations, and the imminent peril to Englishmen and their sacred institutions, "the need for toleration was based on the exigency of the situation and sound policy ”.

Toleration was, therefore, of necessity Lord Baltimore's policy from the very beginning—before it was ever embodied in law. Without it as a fact, and as a policy, they would never have gotten as far as making a “ Toleration Act ” in 1649.

That King Charles, grandson of Mary Stuart, was well disposed to this colony, which he himself had named in honor of his Catholic Queen, and as affording sanctuary to Catholics is evident in the highly favorable clauses Sir George Calvert was allowed to frame in his charter.

In the hands of as astute an administrator as Cecil, Second Lord Baltimore, the charter served its purpose to compose conflicting elements in a spirit of liberality, which proved him well in advance of the men of his age. As this historic list of the

is given by Cecil Calvert in the rare little second book ever printed concerning Maryland, The “ Relation ” of 1635, but three copies of which exist, no doubt they should appear here, as among the founders of a great new world commonwealth. He gives them as—

CALVERT, FATHER OF PROPRIETARY GOVERNMENT IN AMERICA.

So admirably adapted to untrammelled growth were the provisions of the Durham palatinate for a frontier colony, that Calvert's Charter of Maryland became the model for every other colony (except New England) founded afterwards.

"This was the case with New York and the two Jerseys after the English conquest of New Netherlands, with Pennsylvania and Delaware, the two Carolinas and Georgia. One and all were variations upon the theme first adopted in Maryland," says the discerning historian, John Fiske.

Lord Baltimore was, in fact, the Father of Proprietary government in America. But these proprietary rights, at first such a powerful protection against the encroachments of the Crown, became after a time in the minds of the sturdy colonists too powerful an infringement of their own rights. They were attacked and overturned by the people jealous of their own supposed rights as English subjects.

The story of the working out of the Durham Charter upon Maryland soil, steered by its Proprietor, Cecil Calvert, from his English home, kept there for life to defend his property and colonial prerogatives, is the absorbing story of Maryland's first half century. This story is centred no longer in the North, but at Wardour Castle, Wiltshire, near Salisbury in the south of England.

WARDOUR CASTLE—MARYLAND'S NEW CENTRE.

At the time Cecil Calvert, the second Lord Baltimore, received the grant of Maryland he had been living at Wardour Castle three years, having married Lady Anne, fourth daughter of Sir Thomas Arundell, in 1629, when she was 18 and he 23 years of age. Their son, Charles, the quaint little lad holding the Map of Maryland in Gerard Zoest's great portrait of his father⁷ (which long hung at Windlestone Hall and was recently sold to Lord Duveen of London for $21,000 by Sir Timothy Eden), was born at Wardour in 1630.

How intensely concerned for the new colony must have been Lady Baltimore with her small boy of three (the future Governor of Maryland in 1661), how anxious her old father of 72, Sir Thomas, the Valiant, Count of the Holy Roman Empire, famous for his capture of the Turkish battleflag at the siege of Gran, how interested the whole brave household which had beheld many martial companies set off from its stronghold since its erection in 1372. Theirs was a conquering line.

Roger de Arundell, the Norman, had come to England with William the Conqueror, the French word "l'hirondelle", swallow, indicating the basis of his name and family crest. The castle was purchased in 1547 by Lady Anne's grandfather. Her father, Sir Thomas, had been especially recommended for bravery to Emperor Rudolph II of Germany by Queen Elizabeth in a letter still shown with great pride in the muniment room at Wardour. One of the last letters written by him to King Charles before his death in 1639, which the writer found in the English official archives, shows how heavily burdened Sir Thomas was not only by the King's exactions for the Civil War in which Charles had embroiled himself fatally with Parliament, but also for Lord Baltimore's costly enterprise in Maryland. As it evidences Lord Arundell's warm devotion to his favorite son-in-law, and is a graphic picture of the feudal interdependence of sovereign and subject at the outbreak of the Civil War, and has never been published before, it seems fitting to give it in part here. Lord Arundell writes:

the serious-minded promoter of colonization (who had experienced the sudden recall of his first expedition at Gravesend, Oct. 18, 1633, and a costly month's delay till its departure from Cowes, Nov. 22) was made by the late Miss Florence Mackubin for Dr. Hugh Hampton Young of Baltimore, who has added it to the generous series of remarkable original portraits of the Proprietaries of Maryland, which he purchased from Sir Timothy Eden of Windlestone Hall, a direct descendant of the Calverts, and which arrived in Baltimore in time for the inauguration of the Maryland Tercentenary celebration at the War Memorial, Nov. 22, 1933.

As one gazes to-day at the valiant countenance of Sir Thomas which hangs close beside the lovely portraiture of Lady Anne by Van Dyck's skillful hand, looking out upon the grim ruins of "old Wardour", which fell before the fierce siege of the Parliamentary forces in 1643, we were glad to learn that both of them died in 1639, and so escaped the destruction of the splendid old stronghold, which martial Lady Blanche Arundell, with 20 retainers defended for two weeks, while young Lord Arundell and Lord Baltimore were with the King at Oxford.

A few of the treasures Lady Blanche saved from the wreck included the famous family portraits by noted English artists, many Italian masterpieces, and the red and gold royal Stuart bed, where King Charles I slept when at Wardour, and the rare old Saxon Wassail Cup, the most treasured relic of them all.

As Lord Arundell, the owner of the estate, drove us over from the present castle, erected about 1778, to the ruins of the old stronghold we passed close beside the Tudor dowry-house "Hooke House", given to Lady Anne by her father on her marriage to Lord Baltimore and which so generously sheltered these brave adventurers of their all across the sea in Maryland.

As we looked at "Old Wardour," he asked, "Do you notice anything familiar about these old ruins that reminds you of Maryland?"

As we looked more closely at the heavy vine clambering over the ruin "Can it really be Virginia creeper?" we inquired. "Yes," he replied, "it is Virginia creeper sent from Maryland nearly three hundred years ago, with other "rarities" Lord Baltimore was always requesting from the colony he was never to see in person." And then he showed us the most remarkable treasure of all—a great cluster of tree-trunks of what he called an "iron-beam", or "horn-beam tree", with silvery bark which came from Maryland in the long ago, and had stood guard beside a beleaguered tower for nearly three centuries. And curiously enough on coming home we learned there were still such trees known also as "water-beaches", as near Baltimore as our own Gwynn's Falls, and many more in tidewater regions to the southward.

As we beheld these and other rare "trophies" sent from Maryland's soil ages ago we were persuaded how greatly our broad Commonwealth beside the abounding Chesapeake was indebted to its Founders, the First and Second Lords Baltimore, for the unwearying sacrifice, patience, and persistence with which they had established this "land of sanctuary" and prosperity across the sea.

DISFRANCHISEMENT IN MARYLAND (1861-67).

By WILLIAM A. RUSS, JR.

The rebel attitude of a large part of Maryland's population in 1861 was typified by the Baltimore riot. The reasons for this pro-Southern sympathy of perhaps the majority of the State's inhabitants are the same as those for the rebellious sentiments of Missouri and Kentucky. Each was a border State, containing people who adhered to both Union and Secession; both suffered, as a consequence, from the divided state of public opinion inherent in such a condition. As in Kentucky, there were so many Southern sympathizers that it was doubtful what side the State would take in the struggle. If left alone, it would perhaps have seceded, just as Kentucky would probably have remained neutral. The fate of the Union cause thus was held in the balance; for, if Maryland (which surrounded the national capital and which could, therefore, hamstring the Lincoln government) seceded, Washington would have been isolated from Union territory. Lincoln perceived this, and, as a matter of war necessity, determined that Maryland must not secede if Federal forces could prevent it. Thus once more, just as in Kentucky, military force became the only bar between a State and rebellion; for the same reason, the army played a similar rôle in keeping the State Unionist by the usual process of arbitrary arrests and imprisonments without trial: in brief, disfranchisement of rebels by physical force.¹

Even before actual hostilities began, Maryland was occupied by Federal forces which were, legally or illegally, suppressing Secessionism and interfering in local government. As early as July 1, General N. P. Banks was proclaiming to the people of

Baltimore that "Whenever a loyal citizen can be nominated to the office of marshal who will execute the police laws impartially and in good faith to the United States, the military force will be withdrawn at once from the central parts of the municipality."² Military rule bred further secession sympathy; hence it soon became evident that when the legislature met, the State might be declared out of the Union. Lincoln ordered General Scott, who ordered General Banks, to see that this did not occur. Secretary of War Cameron told Banks, on September 11: "The passage of any act of secession by the Legislature of Maryland must be prevented. If necessary all or any part of the members must be arrested. Exercise your own judgment as to the time and manner, and do the work effectively."³ Banks did the work so effectively that on September 17 all Secessionists in the Legislature were arrested, twenty-nine in all.⁴ The oath of allegiance was offered to all and a few took it; others were asked to take the oath and not return to Maryland. This was a hard choice for men like Quinlan, whose income was derived from a farm in the State.⁵

After they had been incarcerated about two months, Senator Reverdy Johnson, on November 12, 1861, advised Seward, Secretary of State, that the rest of the prisoners should be released, for by that date, the terms of all, except of two Senators, had expired. The legislature by a recent election was safely Unionist, hence there was no reason for holding any of the imprisoned persons longer—except the Mayor and Commissioner of Police of Baltimore who still claimed their offices. It would (thought Johnson) result in a good effect on public opinion.⁶ But Governor Hicks, on the same day, advised Seward that the release of these rebels would be suicidal, for they would at once get in touch with the South.⁷ General Dix, however, also advised that they be released because of their ill health resulting from imprisonment.⁸ Most of them were freed on November 26 after taking the oath, although five were retained, because they refused to take it.⁹ Dix did not favor the release of these five until Senator Lynch (one of them) resigned his seat. By January, 1862, due probably to more arrests, ten still declined to take the oath and were held until November 26, 1862, when Stanton, Secretary of War, took over control of disloyal persons from Seward. Stanton immediately ordered the freeing of all political prisoners from Fort Warren, Boston, where the Maryland men had been kept. This was done at once; and finally, Kane, marshal of Baltimore, Brown, the mayor,¹⁰ and ten or twelve members of the legislature were freed after over a year of imprisonment and consequent exclusion from Maryland politics.¹¹

The arrest of the worst of the members of the legislature, as well as of the government of Baltimore, did not, by any means, kill the growth of rebellious sentiments in the State—as a matter of fact, Secessionism was increasing so much that Governor Thomas H. Hicks, on October 12, 1861, wrote a lugubrious

¹⁰ On September 27, 1861, Seward told Dix, in command of Ft. McHenry, in which Mayor Brown was confined, that he might be released upon taking the oath of allegiance, upon resigning his mayoralty, and upon residing in some Northern city. Brown refused. On October 9, Dix suggested, at the request of Brown's brother-in-law, that he be confined to New England, if released. Seward then declined this overture, and offered to release him only upon his taking the oath and giving parole not to aid the South and not to return to Maryland during the rest of the insurrection. In January, 1862, Brown refused these terms because he said that acceptance would be admitting that he had been disloyal. Rebellion Records, Series II, Vol. I, pp. 647, 651-2, 665. Undoubtedly many of these men were unjustly imprisoned. Lawrence Sangston [1814-1876], of Baltimore, a member of the legislature imprisoned at Fort Warren, refused to take any more oaths: "I have twice taken the oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States during the present year and am not disposed to turn a solemn obligation into ridicule by constant repetitions of it." He demanded to know the charges against him. Ibid., p. 706.

letter on Union hopes in general and Maryland's situation in particular:

The loyal States and our Army and Navy are full of traitors; many of our office-holders are faithless to the Government, and unless things are closely looked after and the war carried forward with greater vigor, we shall be whipped I fear. I have not been scared until recently; . . .¹²

But as long as Union forces held Maryland, efforts might be made to neutralize rebel influence by the simple method of military disfranchisement, that is, keeping the disunionists from running for office and from voting. Such was done in the fall elections. On October 29, 1861, General Marcy, chief of McClellan's staff, ordered Banks to prevent rebels in the State from interfering in the coming elections of November 6; to send detachments of soldiers to protect Union voters and "to see that no disunionists are allowed to intimidate them, or in any way to interfere with their rights"; to arrest and confine till after election all disloyalists just returned from Virginia; to see that there was no disorder; and to suspend the writ, if necessary.¹³ The same order was sent to General Stone, commanding also in Maryland. On November 1, General Dix sent an order from Baltimore to the United States marshal of Maryland, and to the provost-marshal of Baltimore, to arrest all rebels who were returning to vote in the elections in order to carry the State for treason and rebellion. He continued:

I, therefore, by virtue of the authority vested in me to arrest all persons in rebellion against the United States, require you to take into custody all such persons in any of the election districts or precincts in which they may appear at the polls to effect their criminal attempt to convert the elective franchise into an engine for the subversion of the Government, and for the encouragement and support of its enemies.¹⁴

what seems to be a brazen violation of Maryland's right to run its own election. In Kentucky, and in Missouri, a disfranchising oath was soon provided and the military could pretend to be executing the law when they prevented rebels from exercising the franchise; but Maryland had no such State law, and the military was forced to invent some other justification. In answer to a letter from the inspectors of election at New Windsor, Carroll county, Dix said he had no power to force disunionists to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, for "the constitution and laws of Maryland provide for the exercise of the elective franchise by regulations with which I have no right to interfere." The only way to handle them, he said, was to arrest them for rebellion and treason and to hold them in jail until the election was over. Judges might also, by searching questions, satisfy themselves whether an individual was a rebel, and thus try "without any violation of the constitution or laws of Maryland, to prevent the pollution of the ballot-boxes by their votes."¹⁵ This was at least a practical solution, for no one could gainsay that imprisonment was effective disfranchisement. The following sentiment from Dix to Provost-Marshal Dodge, on November 5, will complete the picture of military disfranchisement in this election: "We have shown that we can control Maryland by force. We now wish to show that we can control it by the power of opinion, and we shall lose the whole moral influence of our victory if the right of suffrage is not free, and maintained."¹⁶

Needless to state, military arrests, too numerous to detail, continued during the next year, much to the chagrin of all Marylanders, except radicals. Many of these persons secured release and re-enfranchisement by taking the oath of allegiance—the only oath yet available.¹⁷ Still, many languished in jail; the reading of their suffering does not make pleasant diversion. The importance of these arbitrary arrests in this connection is that they rasped on the feelings of even Unionists who felt that, while military control was necessary, it was being carried too far. At all events, this feeling appeared rather prominently in the elections of 1863 which comprised the next political spasm that the State had to go through.

The ire of Maryland emerged in full proportions at General Schenck's General Order 53, of October 27, 1863, which commanded provost-marshals to arrest disloyal persons "hanging about, or approaching any poll"; to support with soldiers the election officials in requiring the oath of allegiance as a test of citizenship from anyone whose vote was challenged; and to report any judge of election refusing to take such an oath himself.¹⁸ Governor Bradford, thinking this an insult to Maryland dignity, overruled the order and protested to Lincoln.¹⁹ The President was hard put to take an attitude entirely on either side, for, on the one hand, he must support, if possible, the military which had saved Maryland in 1861; but, on the other, he could not lose the confidence of the people of the State, especially since this election was to determine the calling of a State convention to abolish slavery, and to pass a disfranchising provision. In his answer, November 3, to Bradford, the President told of interviewing Schenck, and of revoking that portion of the order regarding hangers-about; and he said that the military forces were there only to prevent disorder by disloyal persons. He said that he revoked Schenck's order, "not that it is wrong in principle, but because the military being, of necessity, exclusive judges as to who shall be arrested, the provision is liable to abuse."²⁰ Yet the President felt that Maryland was to blame, since it had neglected to provide a strict oath which would justify the military in its acts; and, he added, in typical Lincoln argumentum ad hominem, that Missouri had provided a disfranchising oath, but that Maryland had not:

. . . General Trimble, captured fighting us at Gettysburg, is, without recanting his treason, a legal voter by the laws of Maryland. Even General Schenck's order admits him to vote, if he recants upon oath. I think that is cheap enough. My order in Missouri, which you approve, and General Schenck's order here, reach precisely the same end. Each assures the right of voting to all loyal men, and whether a man is loyal, each allows that man to fix by his own oath. Your suggestion that nearly all the candidates are loyal, I do not think quite meets the case. In this struggle for the nation's life, I cannot so confidently rely on those whose elections may have depended upon disloyal votes. Such men, when elected, may prove true; but such votes are given them in the expectation that they will prove false.²¹

On November 3 Schenck was forced to modify his order as Lincoln had dictated, and at the same time answered Bradford's protest as follows:

Its principal purpose is to prevent traitorous persons from controlling, in any degree, by their votes, or taking part in the coming election. . . . It is only framed and intended to exclude from a voice in the election of those who are to administer the affairs either of the national Government or of this loyal State such individuals as are hostile to that Government of which Maryland is a part . . . it is clearly not a hardship, to be complained of by the individual challenged for such disqualification, when he is permitted to purge himself by his own oath of allegiance to the Government, in the management of which he claims a share.²²

Hardly had Lincoln instructed Schenck to mollify Maryland's sensibilities, when a worse incident occurred to stir up feeling against Federal supervision. This was an order of November 3, from Chestertown, issued by Lieutenant-Colonel C. C. Tevis, which, in essence, recognized no ticket but the Government one. He said that as a result of a correspondence between Hon. Thomas Swann and Lincoln, he was urging all loyal voters to show their sincerity by voting "the whole Government ticket, upon the platform adopted by the Union League Convention. None other is recognized by the Federal authorities as loyal and worthy of the support of any one who desires the peace and restoration of this Union." At once Schenck disavowed the order and put Tevis under arrest, but restored him on November 9 upon the latter's retraction. In proclaiming Tevis's retraction, Schenck said that the order had been due to 'bad advisers' and that there was no such thing as a Government ticket.²³

The State having decided for a convention, the legislature in January, 1864, passed a convention bill, Section 4 of which laid down, at great length, the qualifications for voting at the election for delegates, and made it almost impossible for any rebel vote to trickle through the meshes. This was probably made minute in order to evade any excuse of military interference by the United States.²⁴ The bill also provided against Federal control in the election, ordering the Governor to keep calling elections until military supervision ceased.²⁵ General Lew Wallace looked askance at this provision and on March 30, 1864, asked Bradford for a description of all the powers of judges in the coming elections. Bradford answered that they had ample powers to prevent disloyal persons from voting or running for office and that State powers were sufficient "if faithfully executed, as I have every reason to hope they will be, to exclude disloyal voters from the polls."²⁶

Wallace, who said that he "regarded rebels and traitors as having no political rights whatever," proceeded to prove his opinion by numerous precautions to keep disloyal persons from the polls—Bradford to the contrary notwithstanding.²⁷ For instance, he ordered one Kilbourn, who had been nominated from Anne Arundel county, to be questioned on his voting record in the Maryland legislature of 1861, and forced him to admit not only that he had voted for a resolution to recognize the independence of the Confederacy, but also to admit that he could not take the oath.²⁸ His name was withdrawn. The judges of election of Cecil adopted a set of questions to be asked of all voters, such as: Have you served in the rebel army? Have you aided the rebellion? Have you given money to aid those intending to join the rebel cause? Have you sent money to those in the rebel area? Have you given comfort and encouragement? Have you wished for the success of the rebellion? Have you discouraged the Federal cause? Are you a loyal citizen of the United States? Did you rejoice over the downfall of Fort Sumter? Did you rejoice over the successes of the rebel, and the defeats of the Union army? When the rebel army meets the Union army in battle, which do you wish to gain the victory? And many similar. Further directions were given to aid registrars in deciding doubtful cases:

Comfort or encouragement means advocacy, advice in favor of. We aid the Rebellion by giving money, clothing, and provisions; we give it comfort or encouragement by our words. A man who has advocated the cause of the Rebellion, who talked in favor of Maryland going with the South, who rejoiced over the victories of the Rebel army, has given comfort and encouragement to the Rebellion. . . .

If the Judges are satisfied that a man is disloyal to the United States, it is their duty to refuse his vote, for such person is not a 'legal voter' of the State of Maryland.²⁹

By such methods the Unionists got a majority and the convention met on April 27, 1864. In the bill providing for a convention there had been included an oath that every delegate must take before the Governor in order to qualify:

that I have never, either directly or indirectly, by word, act, or deed, given any aid, comfort, or encouragement to those in rebellion against the Government of the United States; and this I swear voluntarily, without any mental reservation or qualification whatever, so help me God.³⁰

So well had the military gleaned all disloyal persons from running, that the Committee on Elections neglected to report until August 3. It declared that, every member having taken this oath, all were eligible. The convention was thus safely radical and its work would be certain to reflect this fact.

On May 21 the Committee on the Elective Franchise was ordered to prepare an article in its report to the effect that every person who had aided the present rebellion "ought to be forever disqualified and rendered incapable to hold or exercise within this State any office of profit or trust, civil or military, or to vote at any election hereafter held in this state; . . ." On May 30 the Committee was instructed to prepare an article prohibiting anyone from holding office and voting in Maryland for "the space of three score years and ten" if he voluntarily had left the State to aid the rebellion; and to be disfranchised for five years if he aided the rebellion within the State.³¹

The disfranchising clauses reported by the Committee were stiff enough, but one Stirling became the wheelhorse for disfranchisement by trying to make them even more rigid. He had already offered a resolution to imprison or banish all rebel sympathizers who refused to register and take an oath of allegiance,³² and when the report was offered, he fought it in favor of more stringency. The Committee suggested: 1. Disqualification of anyone forever, unless pardoned by the President, who had rebelled or in any way had aided the Confederacy. 2. An oath (which must be taken by every official on entering office) that he had never directly or indirectly aided the rebellion.³³ The minority reported that it favored no disfranchisement at all, and merely suggested an oath for officers who would swear to bear true allegiance to, and enforce the laws of, the United States and Maryland.³⁴ Stirling led a successful fight against suggestion One of the report, finally causing its deletion and the substitution of a stricter disfranchisement. The substitute disabled forever all who had been in armed hostility to the United States; all who had served or had aided the Confederacy in any capacity, or had gone within the rebel lines, or had left Maryland to adhere, or had communicated with, given information to, or had sent goods, letters or money, to the South; all who had aided or advised anyone to enter the rebellion, or had expressed a desire for the triumph of the South—all such were disqualified unless they had cleansed themselves by voluntarily entering the Union army and had then been honorably discharged, or had been restored by a two-thirds vote of the assembly. Election judges were to require a searching oath from voters; but mere acceptance of the oath was not a proof of the right to vote, for the judges were to have special powers to root out perjury.³⁵ The conservatives said that such a clause not only killed trial by jury but that it was also retrospective.³⁶ Stirling answered: "The only way to prevent civil war is to require those who engage in it to abide the results of their own conduct."³⁷ When the discussion of an oath came up, he again changed the majority report and secured the passage of the following ironclad:

. . . that I have never directly or indirectly . . . given any aid . . . but that I have been truly, and loyally on the side of the United States against those in armed rebellion . . . that I will . . . not allow the same to be broken up or dissolved, or the Government thereof to be destroyed under any circumstances, if in my power to prevent it, and that I will at all times discountenance and oppose all political combinations having for their object such dissolution or destruction.³⁸

A conservative, Jones, raised some opposition by listing ten offenses for which a man might be disqualified under such an oath, but Stirling had his way.³⁹ No more could Lincoln accuse Maryland, under such a structure, of backwardness in its franchise laws. Only 10,000 out of 40,000 in Baltimore and only 35,000 out of 95,000 in the whole State could vote. Two-thirds of the voters were disfranchised.⁴⁰

In order to put these provisions into a form that could be administered, the legislature, on March 24, 1865, passed a registration law excluding negroes, minors, non-residents, persons who had been in armed hostility to the United States, persons who had left Maryland to enter and to live in the rebel area, and persons who had given aid and comfort in any manner.⁴¹ At Baltimore the registrars were given twenty-five questions to ask all applicants. Some of these questions were: Do you think the oath you have just taken morally binding? Are you aware of the danger of perjury? Have you ever been in arms against the United States? Have you ever gone into the Confederate lines to adhere? Have you given money or aid to Secessionists? Have you communicated with rebels or advised anyone to enter the rebellion? Have you deserted the United States army? Have you expressed antipathy to the United States? Have you wished the rebels to succeed? Do you hold any mental reservation in answering these questions?⁴²

The system disfranchised so many that Montgomery Blair in a speech on August 26, 1865, condemned it roundly;⁴³ he represented the wide-spread horror in which it was held now that the war was over. As in Kentucky, as soon as the war ended, there was a concerted move to rid the State of disfranchisement. A moot case (by a refusal to take the oath) was made up in order to contest the law in the courts, but the registrars were sustained by the highest tribunal in the State.⁴⁴ On January 11, 1866 Governor Swann defended the law as best he could before the legislature; he depreciated resistance, saying that disfranchisement had been placed in the Constitution when rebellion was creating so much disloyalty that the Government had to act to defend itself. He asserted that the repeal of the registration law would do no good, since the Constitution demanded an oath. The only way out was to order a convention to change the Constitution.⁴⁵ This suggestion indicated the path to be followed, and so the movement to rebellize Maryland went on apace.

"Individuals were refused registration on the most frivolous grounds, and in many cases without even having heard that any reason whatever was given for their disqualification."⁴⁶ Montgomery Blair, in a letter of October, 1865, said that it was "to screen from punishment the lawless men who, under cover of transcendant loyalty, have been the great offenders against the cause of the Union."⁴⁷ The humiliated majority organized behind the Baltimore Sun and Montgomery Blair to get back their franchise. This movement brought about the calling of an anti-registry law convention in January, 1866, to present protests to the assembly. Blair was chairman and made an appeal for re-enfranchisement of whites. Why, he wished to know, were they disfranchised? He answered his question: So that the Republican party can "hold political power in defiance of the great principle which under-lies our whole form of Government. . . . Disfranchising the people of Maryland is for the same interests that Thad. Stevens is working in the House of Representatives to obtain." The convention passed a memorial which Blair personally presented to the legislature on January 26, 1866, pleading eloquently for removal of disabilities because the war was over and because Maryland needed the services of her own sons.⁴⁸ This same argument was used again and again in Kentucky.

Just as happened in Missouri in 1870, the Union party split in 1866 on the question of disfranchisement, each wing holding a convention. This schism aided the conservatives so much in the fall elections that the radicals lost the assembly; re-enfranchisement of rebels was now only a matter of time.⁴⁹ The legislature soon acted on January 24, 1867, when it passed a law calling a convention "to restore to full citizenship, and the right to vote and hold office, all persons who may be deprived thereof by the provisions contained in the fourth section of the Constitution of this state." This act also explained that these restrictions were really temporary; that the disfranchised were taxed and subjected to military duty, yet could not vote.⁵⁰ At this act, Forney, in the Philadelphia Press said that Maryland Unionists "demand to know whether because they saved Maryland from treason therefore traitors are permitted to rule the State and ruin them?"⁵¹ Just as Unionists in Kentucky had done, so local radicals began appealing to those in Congress for action to stop this rapid turning of the State over to rebels. Nathan Haines, of Carroll county, implored "Thadeus Stephens" to prevent the calling of a convention in the State. What, he asked, are Union men to do? "I think Maryland needs" military reconstruction "about as badly as any of the Southern States, and I do not see any other way for us.—I hope it [Congress] will take us in hand. . . . Give us manhood Suffrage and we are Safe:—My dear friend the Safety of the Nation, enjoins it upon Congress,—to make Suffrage universal,—to disqualify and impoverish traitors,—and confine the ballot to the loyal only."⁵² Another letter implored Congress not to adjourn until it saw what course Maryland would take.⁵³ Maryland's answer seemed to be two more laws. One of March 19, 1867 rescinded that of January, 1865, requiring an oath for attorneys. One of March 23, 1867, repealed an act of January, 1862, which required an oath of allegiance.⁵⁴

Already Representative Ward, of New York, had secured the passage, by vote of 104-35, of a resolution in the House, to the effect that in spite of disfranchisement of rebels and disloyalists by the Maryland Constitution, it was alleged that in the last election for Representatives for the Fortieth Congress, many disabled persons had voted, aided by United States troops who interfered at elections. The Committee of Elections was to inquire if any laws had been violated and how much of the blame should go the President.⁵⁵

But there was still another way for the radicals in Congress to hint to the State that it might have to be taken in hand—at the very same time, in fact, that they were making a similar threat to Kentucky. This method consisted in refusing to seat the choice of the rebel legislature, as Senator from Maryland, by finding some flaw in his record. In brief, when Philip F. Thomas presented his credentials as Senator from Maryland, he was charged with disloyalty and with inability to take the proper oath. Two rather far-fetched charges were brought up against him. The first was that when, in December 1860, he had served as the temporary successor of Cobb as Secretary of the Treasury, he had deliberately tried to imperil the public credit by refusing to pay the interest on the bonded debt. The Nation admitted that this accusation seemed to have been successfully answered. The second charge (which was the real reason for his exclusion) was that he had advanced money to his son to aid him in joining the rebel army, and in so doing had aided the rebellion.⁵⁶ This seemed so flimsy to conservative papers as to appear personal and petty. The New York Times bitterly riddled the Senate's attitude, as "Partisan Intolerance . . . the whole thing dwindled down to a complaint that Mr. THOMAS had behaved kindly to his own son."⁵⁷ The Chicago Times called it "Disfranchisement of Loyal States . . . an act of lawless despotism . . . [an] act of criminality."⁵⁸

to lay the matter before the Senate. It reported it could "find nothing sufficient . . . to debar said Thomas from taking his seat, unless it be found in the fact of the son of said Thomas having entered the military service of the Confederacy, . . ." ⁵⁹ The son, having been called before the Committee, had explained how his father had dissuaded him from going South, but had finally given him $100 for food to keep him from starving and for a horse. The other Maryland Senator, Reverdy Johnson, offered a resolution to admit him if he took the regular oath. ⁶⁰ Thomas was, however, refused admission on the ground of having aided the rebellion by giving his son $100—the vote being 28-21. Trumbull and Fessenden voted for him, while Sumner quoted Sallust regarding Aulus Fulvius, the Roman Senator, who killed his son for joining Catiline. ⁶¹ The Maryland legislature protested vehemently against such an excuse for refusing Thomas, but in the end elected William T. Hamilton, who was able to qualify. ⁶² The Nation thought that the lesson was learned, however, by Governor Swann, who also had been elected Senator, but decided not to give up his Governorship for a position out of which he might be voted, because he was supposed to have received payments of interest on the rebel bonds of Virginia. ⁶³ Whether the charge was true or not, he decided to hold on to what he had—and besides, the Lieutenant-Governor was a radical.

But long before the Thomas case was finally settled, Maryland had definitely changed its fundamental law on disfranchisement, so as to completely hand the State over to the rebels. The convention which had been ordered by the legislature in January, 1867, met in May and the crimes (in the eyes of radicals) perpetrated in that convention could not be prevented by such a gesture as the refusal of the Senatorial toga to Thomas. Nothing short of reconstruction could have undone the rebellization of the State that followed apace.

The radicals, seeing their hold on the State fast slipping, began, of course, to protest to Washington. As early as March, 1867, the Republican minority of the assembly sent a memorial to Congress pleading against what they called the conspiracy (that is, the convention) which had been illegally ordered, and which was to meet in May to change the franchise law. It went on to say:

By doubtful construction of a clause of the existing constitution, this General Assembly, thus elected, has enfranchised all white men, no matter what treason they have committed, and thus have added to the voting population about 30,000 persons who have only lately ceased an armed resistance to the Government.

Next the Legislature had formed a rebel State militia and illegally had redistricted the State. The "... one object of this movement is to legislate out all the remaining loyal officers whom they have not already removed, and place ex-rebels, perhaps brigadiers and colonels of the rebel army in their places."⁶⁴ Unionists had only one hope, and that was Congress. Likewise the Grand Union League of Maryland begged Congress to extend, before it was too late, the reconstruction laws over the State, which had gone rebel.⁶⁵ The resolutions of the Republican State convention, held at Baltimore, declared that the party would oppose the convention bill and the other enfranchising measures just passed, and would refuse to vote for delegates.⁶⁶ Not to be outdone, the Mayor and Council of Baltimore appealed to Congress against the rebels and the coming constitutional convention, blaming it all on a Governor, a traitor to his party, who had appointed his own registrars so that the State could be given over to the worst of the disunionists.⁶⁷ In the face of such an array of pleas from the chief radical bodies in the State, it was hard for the Congressional radicals not to act; yet they were held back by the same unalterable fact that was handicapping them in dealing with rebel Kentucky: the fact that Maryland had never seceded. Even radicals could not stomach legislation over a State which had always been, and still was, in the Union.

The convention met, therefore, in spite of certain radicals in Congress who declared for military force to prevent its assembling. President Johnson went to Annapolis to give it his personal blessing with a typical Johnson speech. The President of the convention and all members had to take, by order of the law calling them into existence, the oath to bear true allegiance to Maryland and the United States, to defend and protect both, to promise not to allow the Union ever to be dissolved, and to prevent any political combinations ever trying to do so.⁶⁸ If this was a studied play to disarm radicals with Unionist words, it did not work, for radicals were in consternation at the entire proceedings. Regarding disfranchisement, there is little to say, except that, by the report of the Committee on the Franchise, it was entirely wiped out of the Constitution. The only clauses even remotely related to it were provisions for a registration law, and an oath to support the Constitution. This report became Article I of the Constitution.⁶⁹ As if to insult Unionism and radicalism to the limit, it disfranchised negroes and asked for compensation for emancipated slaves.

Such insolence brought cries of rage from all radicals. The Missouri Democrat said: "Maryland is a captured State. Not in honest and open assault did the rebels succeed in taking it. . . . But by the treachery of Governor Swann, the enemy was admitted within the walls, and the place was delivered into their hands."⁷⁰ The Chicago Journal also raved impotently:

Kentucky is not to be the only paradise of traitors and pandemonium of Unionists. . . . The only immediate remedy would be the interference of Congress. . . . It is quite certain that those who were traitors, and who now glory in the fact, will control the politics of at least two States, if not disfranchised by an act of Congress.⁷¹

Colfax stated Congressional opinion when he answered a letter of John L. Thomas, of Maryland, requesting his presence at a Border State convention to deal with rebel control in several of these States:

If a State which enfranchises by the tens of thousands every man who has arms to destroy the nation, and along with them every man who took official oaths of allegiance to a so-called government which could only exist on the ruins of the Republic, and, at the same time, disfranchises by the tens of thousands the negroes, that state is not republican and ought to be investigated.⁷² Regarding the fall elections, the New York Tribune said:

No man who fought effectively on the Union side could find a place on that ticket; if he did, the voters would repudiate him. In short, Maryland is now under the sway of the worse [sic] wing of the late Confederate host.

The only hope (continued the editor) was for Congress to enfranchise the blacks, so as to swamp the rebel majority. "Meanwhile, we thank the faithful Radicals who keep the old flag flying. . . ." ⁷³ Greeley's feeling of disgust, and at the same time of impotence, was characteristic of the radical mind. After all, if Maryland and Kentucky wished to go to the devil, their apostasy would have to be suffered. And if the disease could be kept from spreading, it was not mortal, for the rebels of Kentucky and Maryland were a small minority compared to the radicals in the North. Their acts were atrocious, yet if the South could be made Republican, these two States might be left to glory in their own sin; for, in the large, they could not avail much, if the radicals kept the flag flying elsewhere.

The subject must not be dropped before it is emphasized that both Maryland and Kentucky were thus going rebel at the very time that Congress was proposing to deal with the South. The thought in the minds of all who voted for radical reconstruction probably was that the treason of these two States must not be allowed in the South. They were horrible examples of what secessionism in defeat could accomplish, and they clinched any argument in favor of severity as against leniency towards the South. There must be no more Kentuckies and no more Marylands. Thus the seceded South suffered for the rebellious acts of the border States.

BALTIMORE COUNTY LAND RECORDS OF 1673.

Contributed by LOUIS DOW SCISCO.

The Anglo-Dutch naval war seems not to have affected activity in colonial land transfers, for the number of recorded deeds is quite up to the average. As for institutional progress, there is nothing in these deeds to show any local development or any spread of population to new areas.

The items here following summarize pages 101 to 223 of the original land-record liber G. No. J, and also pages 71 to 169 of the transcript in liber T R No. R A. There are two interpolations in the record, showing payments of alienation fees in 1674.

Deed, March 1, 1672-73, Thomas Howell conveying to James Hepbourne 200 acres at the head of Fishing Creek in Sassafra River, adjoining land of Mr. Joseph Gundry. Witnesses, John Hodgson senior, John Owen.

Deed, March 2, 1672-73, Nathaniell Utie, gentleman, for 3,000 pounds of tobacco, conveying to Rutten Garret, planter, a 300-acre portion of the 800-acre tract "Oakinton" on the north side of Swan Creek. Witnesses, Thomas Long, Henry Ward. Interpolated entry that Sheriff Thomas Carleton on March 13, 1673-74, has received from Edward Bedell, for credit of Rutgers Garret, 36 pounds of tobacco for alienation, and entry is certified by Clerk Thomas Hedge.

Deed, January 1, 1672-73, Henry Eldesley, planter, conveying to Ebenezer Blackston, planter, 100 acres at Sassafra River, beginning at the landing of Nicholass Allum and being part of land formerly belonging to Capt. Thomas Howell. Parnell Eldesley signs with grantor. Witnesses, John Owen, William Gives, Miles Gibson.

Deed, September 5, 1671, John Vanheeck, gentleman, and wife Sarah conveying to Thomas Hawker 300 acres formerly conveyed by Vanheeck to him, adjoining land of Capt. Josias Fendall at Fendall's Creek. Witnesses, Richard Ball, T. Salmon. Appendant certificate, June 18, 1673, of delivery of seisin by Vanheeck, signed by T. Salmon, William Salsbury.

Deed, December 4, 1672, Robert Taylor, planter, of Gunpowder River, for 1,000 pounds of tobacco, conveying to Joseph Peircey, carpenter, of Back River, the 100-acre tract "Taylors Delight" on the east side of Gunpowder River. Witnesses, John Taylor, John Waterton.

Deed, April 6, 1672, John Browning, planter, and wife Elizabeth, for 28,000 pounds of tobacco, conveying to Richard Nash of Kent County 300 acres near Bohemia River, called Browning plantation, patented July 21, 1664, to Abraham Morgan, who conveyed it to Thomas Browning, father of the grantor; by same deed Henry Ward, esquire, is named attorney to record the deed. Witnesses, Augustine Herrman, Rowland Williams, Thomas Shelton. Appendant certificate, April 6, that grantors have delivered seisin to Nash, signed by same witnesses.

Deed, March 4, 1672-73, Richard Leake, tailor, and wife Gwilthin, for 7,000 pounds of tobacco, conveying to Hanse Peterson and James Watson, planters, the 300-acre tract called the Indian Range, at the head of the western branch of Back Creek in Sassafras River, adjoining John Cock's land and bounded by Cocke's Branch. Witnesses, Richard Ball, T. Salmon.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SOCIETY.

May 8th, 1933.—The regular meeting of the Society was held tonight with the President in the chair.

A list of the donations made to the Library and Gallery since the last meeting was read.

Mr. Louis H. Dielman was recognized by the Chair and he gave a brief sketch of the old swivel gun now on exhibition in the library. It is the tradition that this gun was used in the defense of Fort Cumberland. Photographs of the gun have been sent to various authorities on the subject of fire arms and they have given us some interesting information. The Curator of Fort Ticonderoga presented us with a piece of flint of the type used in the swivel gun.

It was noted that there were no nominations for membership and each member was asked to recognize his duty and try to secure a new member.

The following named persons, having been previously nominated, were elected to membership:

Mr. Skipwith Wilmer Pleasants

Mr. R. R. Griffith

Mr. Arthur Tracey

The death of our member Mrs. William Thomas Wilson was reported.

Dr. William Rush Dunton, Jr., was then introduced. He showed some lovely examples of early quilts and gave a brief history of each one. Some colored lantern slides were also shown in this connection.

Mr. J. Alexis Shriver moved that a standing vote of thanks be extended to Dr. Dunton for his most delightful and interesting talk.

October 9th, 1933.—The regular meeting of the Society was held tonight at the Peabody Institute, in the Concert Hall. Due to the interest created among our members in the lecture on the Rockefeller Institute Restoration Work at Williamsburg, Virginia, our library was not adequate to take care of the number of persons wishing to attend.

Mr. W. Hall Harris, President of the Maryland Historical Society presided, but announced that all matters of regular business would be dispensed with, excepting the reading of the names of those persons who have been placed in nomination for membership in the Society since the last regular meeting.

Mr. William G. Perry, member of the firm of Perry and Shaw of Boston, gave a very interesting talk on the Rockefeller Restoration Work at Williamsburg, Virginia, and showed lantern slides of the progress being made on these old buildings.

November 13th, 1933.—The regular meeting of the Society was held tonight with the President in the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as read. President Harris expressed the thanks of the Society for the courtesy of the Peabody Institute in allowing us to hold our October Meeting in the Peabody Concert Hall owing to the number of members of the Society who wished to attend, and the rooms of this Society being too small to accommodate the crowd.

The following named persons were elected to membership:

Mr. John Carroll Stow	Mrs. John Paul Tyler
Mr. Delmar L. Thornbury	Mrs. Joseph Earle Moore
Mr. Roland M. Hooker	Mrs. J. Frederick Essary
Mr. John Meagher	Mr. William Walter Bryan

Miss Cecilia M. Muth	Mr. James R. Paine
Dr. George F. Libby	Dr. William Mercer Sprigg
Mrs. William S. Hilles	Mr. Edward H. Glidden, Jr.
Mr. James C. Thompson	Mr. Edw. Breckenridge Lowndes
Mr. James Rittenhouse	Miss Julia E. Spilker
Mrs. Elmore B. Jeffery	Mr. Henry Chandlee Forman
Mrs. Eli Vernon Brown	Mr. R. Bennett Darnall
Dr. George M. Anderson	Mr. Charles J. Werner
Mr. B. Harris Henderson	Miss Ella Ijams
Rt. Rev. C. F. Thomas

Mr. J. Alexis Shriver was recognized by the Chair. He gave a brief account of the very successful day spent by the members of the Harford County Historical Society at Tudor Hall, near Belair, commemorating the 100th anniversary of the birth of Edwin Booth. A letter was read from Mr. E. H. Sothoron of the Players Guild expressing his regret at being unable to attend the exercises due to his sailing on the 23rd of October but extended the very best wishes of Mrs. Sothoron and himself for the efforts of the Maryland Historical Society and the Harford County Historical Society to honor the birth of Edwin Booth. It may be noted here that Mr. Sothoron died on the day that he was to sail for Europe.

The Maryland Tercentenary Commission has extended to this Society a cordial invitation to be present on the 22nd of November, at 2:30 P. M., at the War Memorial to hear the broadcast from Cowes, England and the answer to be returned by Gov. Ritchie, and a word of greeting from President Roosevelt, all in connection with the unveiling at Cowes by the Maryland born Lord Fairfax of the tablet which is being placed in honor of the sailing of the "Ark" and the "Dove."

Mrs. Arthur Barneveld Bibbins was then introduced and she gave a most entertaining talk on the English homes of the Lords Baltimore, illustrated with lantern slides.

It was moved, seconded and carried that a rising vote of thanks be extended to Mrs. Bibbins in appreciation for such a delightful evenings entertainment.

December 11th, 1933.—The regular meeting of the Society was held tonight with President Harris in the chair.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved as read.

A list of the donations to the library since the last meeting was read.

The following named persons, having been previously nominated, were elected to membership:

Active

Dr. Noble C. Powell	Mr. Henry M. Walker
Dr. Angus L. MacLean	Mrs. James M. Warrick
Mr. Kent R. Mullikin	Mr. Basil Sollers
Mr. Robert M. Torrence	Dr. Raymond Gerard Willse
Sister M. Clotilde Holbein

Associate

Mr. Thomas M. Goodrich

The following deaths were reported from among our members:

Mr. John D. Urie, on November 19th, 1933.

Mrs. Hester Dorsey (Albert Levin) Richardson, on December 10th, 1933.

The President spoke of the lamentable fact that the Key manuscript of the Star Spangled Banner is to be offered for sale at auction in New York City but that it was not within the power of the Society to make any drastic efforts to try to save it for Baltimore.

Mr. James E. Hancock, President of the Society of the War of 1812 in Maryland, was recognized. He told of the efforts of his Society to obtain some details of the sale and perhaps arrange to secure the manuscript for the Society of 1812. In this connection he introduced the following resolutions:

“ Whereas, We have heard that the original manuscript of the Star Spangled Banner as written by Francis Scott Key is about to be disposed of by the executors of the Estate of the late Henry Walters.

" And whereas, We have understood that Mr. Henry Walters had purchased said manuscript with the understanding that it would be kept in Baltimore.

" Therefore be it resolved, That the Maryland Historical Society, assembled in General Meeting, December eleventh, nineteen hundred and thirty-three, would deprecate the departure of this interesting relic which is so closely identified with the history of Baltimore, and hope that proper means will be taken to retain it in this city."

The motion was seconded and unanimously carried.

Mr. William L. Marbury was recognized by the Chair. He suggested that the Society express to his honor the Mayor of Baltimore that an effort be made by the City to secure the Key manuscript.

Upon motion duly seconded and carried the Corresponding Secretary was advised to inform the Mayor of Baltimore of the feeling of the Society in the matter of the Key manuscript, and to forward to him a copy of the Resolutions as presented by Mr. Hancock.

The President brought to the attention of the meeting the possibility of having the Rotary Club of Baltimore deposit with this Society the memorial plaque which has been presented to said club by the Cowes Rotary Club in connection with the unveiling of the tablet at Cowes, England, commemorating the sailing from there of the "Ark" and the "Dove."

It was moved that a Committee be appointed to take this matter up with the President of the Baltimore Rotary Club, and the following named members of the Society to constitute said Committee. Mr. William Ingle, Mr. Thomas Foley Hisky, and Mr. J. Alexis Shriver.

The motion was duly seconded and carried.

The President extended the thanks of the Society to Mr. Henry Chandlee Forman for his gift to the library of a volume prepared by him entitled, "The Turner Family of 'Hebron' and Betterton, Maryland."

Mr. Forman, the speaker of the evening, was then recognized and he gave a most delightful talk on the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Century architecture of Maryland, and later showed colored lantern slides of the exterior and interior views of some of the earliest houses in St. Mary's and on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

Upon motion of Mr. J. Alexis Shriver, duly seconded and carried, the thanks of the Society were extended to Mr. Forman for his most interesting and entertaining lecture.

NOTES, REVIEWS AND QUERIES.

First Settlement of ye Plantations of Piscatawy and Woodbridge, olde East New Jersey. By ORRA EUGENE MONNETTE. (A series of eight or more parts.) Los Angeles, California, Limited to 350 copies.

Part five of this work has just been received, covering pages 650 to 884 and containing 47 illustrations. It is difficult to comment intelligently on this work in its incomplete state, as it is different in construction from other genealogical works. It contains a great mass of data supported by photostatic and photographic copies of documents and records. The material is doubtless of great value, but until the contemplated index is completed it is obviously difficult of access, as the tables of contents do not give an adequate clue to the vast amount of material gathered into these nearly 900 pages. When completed and fully indexed, it will doubtless take its place as a major achievement in genealogy.

Our Earliest Colonial Settlements; their diversities of origin and later Characteristics. By CHARLES M. ANDREWS. New York, 1933, pp. 179. $2.50. (Stokes Foundation.)

These six lectures by Dr. Andrews are not only illuminating, as was to be expected, but are equally delightful from a literary standpoint. The settlements of Virginia, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and Maryland are considered from the point of colonization and later development. "An unbiased approach to the colonies from the standpoint of their origin will do something to eliminate those patriotic and nationalistic obsessions that have often led to an interpretation of the American past in a manner rather ingenious and artificial than historical." A valuable and thoroughly enjoyable work.

Proceedings of the Maryland Court of Appeals, 1696-1729.

Edited by Hon. CARROLL T. BOND. American Historical Association, 1933.

This is the first volume in the series of "American Legal Records," sponsored by the American Historical Association. From the Foreword we quote: "For the initial volumes, it was decided to select judicial records of the eighteenth century—a period even more seriously neglected than the earlier colonial era—beginning with the proceedings of the Maryland Court of Appeals from 1695 to 1729."

The Founding of Maryland. By MATTHEW PAGE ANDREWS. Williams & Wilkins: Appleton-Century, $4.50.

This timely contribution to the Tercentenary Celebration of the founding of our commonwealth, is the most important study of the period that has yet appeared and is by far the best work that Mr. Andrews has yet done. It should have a place in every public library and should be patronized by everyone interested in our local history. The work was sympathetically reviewed in the Evening Sun of December 9th.

Cato, the Censor, on Farming. Translated by ERNEST BREHAUT. Columbia University Press, 1933, pp. 156. Price, $3.75. (Records of Civilization, No. XVII.)

That Cato the Elder's De agricultura is an invaluable document has been recognized for more than twenty centuries. To the "Records of Civilization," Mr. Brehaut now adds the first complete translation into English of Cato's work, and scholarship is the gainer thereby. Detailed notes accompany the translation, and an introduction clarifies the text.

It is a handbook upon vine and olive-culture, written for any gentleman of means who is about to take up agriculture as a business venture, the only peaceful pursuit open to such a gentleman.

As a picture of rural life in the old Roman Republic, Cato on Farming, has surpassing merit.

Question. Who were the parents of Margaret Crabb who married Dr. Richard Johns (1703-1748) of Calvert Co., a son of Abraham and Margaret (Hutchins) Johns, and had Elizabeth, b. 1734, m. an Orme; Thomas, 1737, m. Sarah Hollyday (1751-) dau. of Dr. Leonard Hollyday; Margaret, b. 1742, m. Brooke Beall; Jane, b. ? m. a Ridgely; Philip; and maybe a sixth child?"

Notes. Ralph Crabb had a Margaret who m. a Hilleary, as "Monnette Family" states. That book also states that "Henry Crabb (1) had one son Ralph," but Ralph's will names brother Edward; "Semmes Papers" in Md. Hist. Soc. gives will of Thomas Crabb March, 1719, wife Elizabeth, dau. Elizabeth; dau. Margaret; dau. Jane, who m. C. S. Smith. Added note says "Kin. Ralph, a brother, C. S. Smith, son-in-law."

The names of the children of Margaret (Crabb) Johns suggest Thomas as her father.

Joseph Birkhead's will, 1739, names nephews Philip and Williams Johns, sons of his sister Margaret and Dr. Richard Johns. (I think Joseph was a step-brother of Richard Johns.)

Yours truly,

Edwin T. Pollock,

Captain, U. S. Navy. (Ret.)
